Of The Day

AIR FARES

THREE British airlines are now trying to start cut-price economy services to Hongkong. They may be certain of stiff opposition from the biggest carrier on this route—Boac. But there is no doubt how most of the travelling public feel about a plan that involves using internationally acceptable aircraft at half the fare. The applications by Eagle, Hunting-Clan and Airwork deserve to succeed. The present agreed scale of fares is justified by the fact that many outlying services are uneconomic and are subsidised by those that are more profitable. If agreements regulating international air fares were abandoned, the ensuing price war would result in drastically reduced operations. Since Boac is a Commonwealth line with many unprofitable small traffic routes the British Government will find the argument difficult to counter if the present wide scale of operations is to continue. Boac has been built up to its present size both with taxpayers' money and a virtual Government promise to underwrite any substantial setback. So the Government is unlikely to begin undermining what it has so carefully cultivated.

WITH these issues fare-paying passengers can feel little sympathy. Nor can they feel cheerfully disposed to monopoly practices which keep fares at what others consider to be almost twice their economic level. The high cost of new aircraft will be cited as another reason why fares are kept high, but no one has proved that passengers will be any the worse off for greater competition.

Hongkong stands to benefit by having as many airlines as possible serving the Colony. The cheaper the fares, the more people will come and the more they will have to spend. All true supporters of private enterprise—on which this Colony's prosperity is based—must hope that the new airline services are approved.

My Zoo Plans, by Mr Chang

Laichikok To Be Developed If I Get The Land I Want

by GERRY XAVIER

Mr C. K. Chang, managing director of the Laichikok Amusement Park, told me yesterday about plans to give Hongkong a bigger and a more attractive zoo. The present one at Laichikok, he said, was too small to qualify for the description of a zoo. "It is really no more than an exhibition of animals," he said.

The steady increase in the number of visitors to the Laichikok Amusement Park ever since animals were displayed there has convinced Mr Chang that a zoo will be popular. He is aware of the controversies that have been raging over this issue.

Uncertain

There is one uncertain factor underlying Mr Chang's plans—the lease on part of the land on which the Amusement Park stands expires in June this year. The realisation of Mr Chang's plans hinge on the removal of the lease on this land for a further term.

The present area of the Amusement Park is 200,000 square feet, 80,000 of which is privately-owned land. More than half the 200,000 square feet will be allotted to build the zoo should Government renew the lease. The present zoo site is 80,000 square feet.

Japanese Lines

Mr Chang plans to build his zoo along Japanese lines, comprehensive and attractive. He will also incorporate in it an aquarium on the lines of one he saw in a Japanese zoo. He was told on the idea that a Japanese-style zoo will appeal to the Hongkong public. He has no Whipsnade or Taronga Park in mind. The space shortage in Hongkong will never permit it, he said. Mr Chang plans to approach Government at a later date for a site of hilly land between Castle Peak Road and the Laichikok bus terminus, adjacent to the Park.

Baked Beans' Commercial Sounded Like Star's Voice

London, Feb. 6. Scottish film actor Alastair Sim, today lost his appeal in a case in which he sought an injunction against a British television company for allegedly using an imitation of his voice in a commercial for baked beans. The court of appeal upheld the judgment of a lower court on the grounds that 58-year-old Mr Sim had not shown that irreparable damage would otherwise ensue. Mr Sim objected to a television cartoon in which an act extolled the excellence of a brand of baked beans.

Complained

He complained that the voice of the character was so similar to his own that a restaurant manager and several friends thought it was him speaking. Mr Sim was entitled to protect his voice as an actor. But he had not shown the court that it should interfere on the ground that unless it did, no irreparable damage would ensue.—Reuter.

Accra Short Of Water

Accra, Feb. 6. The City of Accra, which has been in the grip of a severe drought for the past two and a half months, is to receive an emergency water supply from the Volta River, 55 miles away, from tomorrow. A fifth of the present daily residential consumption of 2,000,000 gallons—400,000 gallons—will be piped through.

Immediately after his return today from a 12-day visit to Nigeria, the Prime Minister, Dr Kwame Nkrumah, held a two-hour meeting to discuss the drought crisis, which is expected to continue till mid-March.—Reuter.

Cyprus Problem

Zurich, Feb. 6. Greek and Turkish Premiers and Foreign Ministers with their advisers tonight resumed discussions on the Cyprus problem after a morning meeting which officials of both sides described as "cordial and frank".—Reuter.

U.S. Launches Its Biggest Rocket

Cape Canaveral, Feb. 6. An American long range Titan ballistic missile was launched from Cape Canaveral today.

Chinese New Year Holidays

The China Mail will not be published on Monday but will resume publication on Tuesday with an early edition. The Sunday Post Herald will appear as usual tomorrow. The South China Morning Post will not appear on Monday or Tuesday.

Tokyo To Spend £15,000 On Akihito's Wedding

Tokyo, Feb. 6. The Tokyo Metropolitan Government said today it had decided to spend 15 million yen (£15,000) as expenses for the celebrations marking the wedding of Crown Prince Akihito in April.

The wedding of Prince Akihito and his commoner bride-to-be, Miss Michiko Shoda, is expected to take place on April 10. The ceremonies will include a rally at the Meiji Outer Gardens in which about 100,000 citizens will participate. The newly-wed royal couple will be asked to attend the rally. The Justice Minister, Mr Kiichi Aichi, said yesterday that the Government would be granted on the occasion of the wedding of Prince Akihito.—Reuter.

MALAN HAS A STROKE: CONDITION BAD

Dr Daniel F. Malan

Capetown, Feb. 6. Dr Daniel Malan, former South African Prime Minister, suffered a stroke today and his condition tonight was reported to be deteriorating. Dr Malan, who is 54, was Prime Minister from 1948 until he retired in 1954 in favour of Mr Johannes Strijdom, who died last year. He has been ill since October.

Segregation

Dr Malan, who became a prominent Protestant clergyman before entering politics, was noted among other things for his zeal in strengthening the policy of racial segregation. Mrs Malan summoned a doctor when her husband became ill at lunch and his condition later deteriorated rapidly, his right arm being paralysed. An injection was given and Dr Malan slept restfully. The latest report said Dr Malan was "very ill".—Reuter.

Summit Meeting In April?

Washington, Feb. 6. Reliable sources said today a big four conference on Germany probably will be held about the end of April in Geneva.—U.P.I.

Blood Bath In Cuba

Havana, Feb. 6. Thirteen convicted "war criminals" were shot by firing squads today, the largest number since 72 were shot in a single day in Santiago last month. Twenty other followers of the ousted dictator, Fulgencio Batista, were condemned to death by revolutionary tribunals. Major Humberto Sori Marin, Army Advocate General, announced that two new revolutionary tribunals would begin to function immediately in Havana's La Cabaña fortress prison, bringing the total there to four, in order to expedite the trials of Batista's aides.

13 Executed

Of the 13 executed today, ten faced firing squads in Sania Clara after their appeals were denied. Allan Robert Nye, former U.S. Navy flier of Chicago and Coral Gables, Florida, remained in gaol meanwhile, under suspicion of having come to Cuba to assassinate the rebel leader, Fidel Castro, at the behest of Batista. A member of the American Embassy staff who was permitted to see Nye yesterday said Nye repeated again that he did not wish for any U.S. Government aid and appeared confident that a talk with top rebel authorities here would result in his release.—U.P.I.

Bomb Scare On Embassy Row In Washington

Washington, Feb. 6. Police throw a cordon around the Soviet Embassy here today after an army demolition squad investigated a briefcase which had led to a bomb scare. It contained only books and diplomas. Police cars rushed to the scene with sirens screaming after an unidentified man dropped the briefcase in the embassy entrance. A member of the Embassy staff hurled the briefcase into the street, then called the police. They throw up the cordon in the area of the Embassy in an unsuccessful attempt to find the man who had dropped the briefcase.—Reuter.

A ROCKET TO MARS WOULD BE A 'LUCKY ACCIDENT'

Washington, Feb. 6. SCIENTISTS eager to learn all about Mars and Venus are stymied at the moment by their ignorance of the earth. They could not hope with present equipment and knowledge to get a probing rocket to earth's neighbours except by a lucky accident. It is a matter of having to know precisely where you are before you can tell precisely where you're going. According to Dr Homer E. Newell Jr of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, lack of such precise information "is one of the most difficult problems that faces us." The only way to shoot a probe as far as Mars or Venus now would be with ballistic missile engines. Ballistic missiles are put on course to target with "initial guidance" systems which cease to operate once the rocket engines have stopped firing a few minutes after launch. To put such a rocket on a trajectory that would take it to one of the planets would require exact knowledge of the distance to be covered. This in turn calls for extremely precise information about a number of "physical constants" including the so-called astronomical unit. The astronomical unit is the mean distance between earth and sun. Astronomers know with great accuracy the distances between planets in terms of the astronomical unit. But they know but poorly the length of the astronomical unit in terms of miles or any other standard that a rocket guidance system would understand. This does not rule out successful moon shots. But over the vast planetary distances even slight errors in initial guidance could throw a Mars or Venus rocket far off course.—U.P.I.

FILMS CURRENT & COMING

by ANTHONY FULLER

AN amusing weekend and holiday at the cinema. Three right good comedies, one western, and a delightful pantomime. Pick what you like and you can't go wrong.

You will soon be seeing one of the best feats of photography ever in a film version of "Bell Book and Candle". To be shown at the King's and Princess. The photographer is James Wong Howe, a name familiar to all discerning film goers.

News for the Horror Fans. Allied Artists are to make two films based on original horror stories by Alfred D. Cope. Titles: "The Experiment of Doctor Zann," and "The Gypsy's Hand." Both are shortly to go into production.

The British Film Academy has just made the following awards: to "Room At The Top," a British film.
Best Film from any Source.
Best British Film.
Best Performance by a British Actress: Hermione Baddeley.
Best Performance by a British Actor: Laurence Harvey.
Second Nomination: Sir Donald Wolfit.
Best Performance by a Foreign Actress: Simone Signoret.
Most Promising Newcomer to Films: Mary Peach.
"Room At The Top," is a Lion International Film, and will be distributed here by 20th Century-Fox, and probably shown at the Roxy and Broadway.

20TH Century - Fox's CinemaScope, De Luxe Colour treatment of Guthrie's "These Thousand Hills," is the choice of the Roxy and Broadway for Chinese New Year. Readers of this Pulitzer Prize novel will know the action is concerned with the adventures of a young cowboy who drifts into an Oregon town with a huge cattle herd.

He stays on to become a good citizen of the town and finally gambles away his position to defend a woman who has not a good reputation. Don Murray is cast in the lead which is a marked contrast to the part he played in "A Hatful of Rain."

Opposite him is Richard Egan as a rancher gambler who becomes Murray's chief enemy and with whom... yet... you've got it, Murray fights a prolonged hand-to-hand battle. Lee Remick is the dance-hall angel, and Pat Owens is the girl Murray marries. The other outstanding part is taken by Stuart Whitman as Murray's companion who runs foul of Egan.

Filmed against the beautiful backgrounds, the film is a 'cert' for the Western fan, but most of the ingredients are rather too familiar now.

Nevertheless, the film moves at a pace, with a chattering climax, and taken along with the rest of the holiday film fare, offers excellent contrast.

READERS of this review had better adjust their discount to my opinion of "The Horse's Mouth," according to their admiration of Alec Guinness. I will say that my admiration for him as an interpreter of eccentric characters knows no bounds; and "The Horse's Mouth," opening at the Star and Metropole tomorrow merely confirms me in my opinion.

Adapted from the best selling novel of Joyce Cary, this screen adaptation was written by Alec Guinness who stays along in it with Kay Walsh, Renee Houston, and Mike Morgan.

Guinness takes over the role of Gully Jimson, eccentric artist, tramp, renegade, arch non-conformist and genius. And he plays the part as he sees it, and he sees it very well indeed.

The setting of "The Horse's Mouth" is London, but true enough if one allows for that touch of artistic licence Guinness brings to the film.

Pubs, art exhibitions, high characters in low pubs, a sort of zany London Bohemia on the loose.

You will know by now that this film is the Royal Command Performance choice for this year, and that the American critics have already gone crazy about it.

It's a winner all the way. A must for every Guinness fan. Guinness gives once again a delightful and joyous performance. He is excellent; and so are the rest of the cast. It's a great film. Guinness is certainly good for you.

"Tom Thumb" showing at the Hoover and Paramount is a real holiday film. Lighthearted, gay, colourful, and full of good music, it is a delight for young and old.

English filmgoers will be struck by the real pantomime treatment this film receives. It is just like getting the Lyceum Pantomime on a film. More wonderful in fact, because the camera can do tricks that could never be obtained on the real stage.

Bearing little resemblance to the story by the Brothers Grimm, the film is, if anything, an improvement on the story.

Made in Eastman Colour, it has the lovely June Thorburn for the principal girl, as beautiful a Fairy Queen as you could meet, and one who comes and goes as no pantomime queen could ever hope to do.

Russ Tamblyn is only as big as your thumb; all done by camera magic. The two villains are Terry-Thomas and Peter Sellers, and both in pantomime tradition.

Alan Young and Jessie Matthews have straight parts as Tom's foster parents. The music is lively, tuneful, and the "Tawny Toad" song, sung by a puppet is about the best thing ever done in trick photography.

Two sequences stick out in my mind. The beautiful fairy tale opening, and the Russ Tamblyn dance with the toys.

Of course, every child in the country must see it. I can imagine nothing more delightful about this fairy tale is, the grown ups will love it too. A real fine choice for the Chinese New Year.

"Geisha Boy," holiday comedy at the King's and Princess, returns popular comedian Jerry Lewis to the Hongkong cinema. This VistaVision Technicolor brash and buoyant piece of nonsense uses the pastel-hued vistas of Japan for its locale, and at times it is very beautiful.

Lewis, who seems determined to stereotype himself as the screen's goofy genius plays a bungling inept magician who gets a job entertaining the U.S. Forces.

The comedy here is, he irritates everyone with his goofiness, and the truth is, I was slightly irritated myself.

He travels with an educated rabbit, and personally, I think this rabbit should get star billing, for it is easily the best actor in the first half of the film.

The best parts of the film are the gags: Pretty Nobu McCarthy (Japanese marries to a G.I. in real life) takes Jerry to see her.

father Sessue Hayakawa, who played the Japanese Officer in "The Bridge on the River Kwai."

The gag is, they go in to the garden where Hayakawa is dressed in Officer's uniform while the P.O.W.s are constructing a miniature bridge to the March, "Colonel Bogey," whistled, of course.

Also tangled up in the Jerry Lewis complications is Marie McDonald, the temperamental star of the troupe.

Well, it is all high links in Japan.

Let it be said, this is a good comedy film, distinctly American in its angle, but it will please the Jerry Lewis fans. Nothing subtle about it, ranging from sheer uninhibited sentiment to unabashed slapstick. The extreme being is, and his affection for a little lost Japanese boy to a crash encounter in a Japanese public bath.

BRITISH comedies move to the top with "The Big Money," an absolute riot of mirth, showing at the Lee and Astor.

Filmed in big screen and Technicolor, starring Ian Carmichael, Belinda Lee, Kathleen Harrison, and Robert Helpmann, it trumps every trick of the comedy game.

It opens with a heart-warming shot of the Friths' comfortable home in a London suburb. The atmosphere captures your mind right away. They are a delightful family, hard working, and full of admiration for one another.

Ever Mum goes out to work, shoplifting! Dad the breadwinner has had a good day with three or four wallets. She has a nice new mink stole; all her minks are stole; only Willie is a failure (Ian Carmichael). He has "lifted" a commercial traveler's sample case.

He determines to make good, to get into the big money, and that is the plot. Ian Carmichael has now established himself in this character, the pensive rogue. His barmalud friend out to help him spend the big money is Belinda Lee.

The act that always gets a British audience screaming is provided by Robert Helpmann as the crook in parson's collar. To hear him bowl out his mob in a pulpit voice is very very funny.

Colourful, interesting all the time, a lovely shot of Ascot, a slapstick scene in a night club, a Keystone Comedy free for all in a lush hotel, hold you helpless with laughter.

For supporting roles, I select Leslie Phillips as the receptionist in the swanky hotel, and Renee Houston as a barmalud. Made without restraint, completely uninhibited, a right snorting laugh from beginning to end.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE SATURDAY MAIL FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH NEWS DESK

Foster-Mum
(A BLACK) HEN
Disowns
5ft Emu

Newcastle.
JACKY, a 5 ft. emu, has been disowned
by her foster-mother—a small black Orpington
hen.

The hen which hatched Jacky almost two years ago is now caring for her newly-hatched pea-fowl chick.

The fond relationship between the Orpington and her big emu
"daughter" ended this week.

At Newcastle zoo the hen attacked Jacky every time she ventured near the pea-fowl chick.

Zookeeper Jack Cain said, "I set the fowl on two emu eggs about two years ago, after the emu mother deserted them."

"They were buried in sawdust and she could just cover them."

MOTHERED

"Each day I turned the eggs as an emu usually does."

"Only one hatched and we called her Jacky."

"The fowl mothered her as if she was her own chicken."

"After six weeks Jacky was 18 inches high and heavier than her foster mother."

"She used to trample on her at feed time."

The hen seemed very proud of her big chicken.

GOOD MATES

"She stopped mothering Jacky but they have always roamed around together."

"A couple of months ago I gave the hen several pea-hen eggs to sit on."

"She hatched one pea-chick and left the other eggs."

"Now she has this new chicken, she won't allow Jacky to come near her."

Behind a locked door in Zurich a silent group stood...
"St George & the Dragon" goes to UK

London.
BEHIND the locked doors of a flat in Zurich a silent group of British art experts studied a 500-year-old, unframed painting, brought from the vaults of a nearby bank. The experts, headed by Sir Philip Hendy, Director of the National Art Gallery, liked what they saw and agreed on a price: £125,000.

Detail from Uccello's
St George & the Dragon

Now the picture, Uccello's St George and the Dragon, is British property and will hang in the National Gallery, Tra-falgart Square.

The price means that every man, woman, and child in Britain has each paid a fraction over a halfpenny for a masterpiece that few people have ever seen.

The painting, measuring 23in. by 30in., has been stored in the Zurich bank vaults since 1045, when it was rescued from a blazing palace in Vienna, a home of Count Lanckoronski, who has now sold it to Britain.

Even before that relatively few people saw it in the palace, and since 1039, says a National Gallery official, "it has virtually been seen by nobody."

At the National Gallery last night an expert said: "The picture has considerable historical interest. It may be the first of easel pictures to have survived."

"It is certainly the most important picture of its kind to be added to our collection since 1010."

In the Commons, Mr. J. E. S.
Simon, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, described it "as the finest picture of the Italian Renaissance still remaining in private hands."

Now the picture is to be cleaned and framed by National Gallery experts and will be on view in about three months time.

Covent Garden will also get more help.

Its grant this year is £362,000.
Now under a new agreement with the Arts Council Covent Garden will receive for the next three years 43 per cent of its expenditure as approved by the Council, which will give it £450,000 next year.

This is an increase of £88,000.
The Arts Council grant will be raised by £118,000 to £1,218,000. About £20,000 of this will be used towards clearing off Covent Garden's £100,000 overdraft.

There was nothing extra for Sadler's Wells. These needs are still being investigated.

Mr. Simon made the announcement in a debate on a private motion urging more aid for the arts.

IT'S CHEAP

Pierre Jeanneret writes: The price of £125,000 must be accounted cheap as art prices go these days.

The St George and the Dragon was about the last important painting by Uccello left in private hands.

It is a delightful example of one of the most significant painters of Florence in the 15th century, when the city was in the vanguard of the Renaissance.

The National Gallery already possesses one of Uccello's masterpieces, the Rout of San Romano, one of the most widely popular pictures in the collection.

GOOD NEWS

In the Commons art lovers had more good news from Mr Simon.

Another "very important acquisition" for the National Gallery was the masterpiece of the Flemish painter, Jordaens, known as the Double Portrait, which had been accepted in satisfaction of estate duty at a cost of £40,000.

And the National Gallery's yearly purchase grant was going up from £125,000 to £100,000.
Altogether Britain's museums and art galleries buying grants are to go up from £125,000 yearly to £233,000. The Tate Gallery will have £40,000 instead of £17,500.

For years art-lovers, including members of both Houses of Parliament have been campaigning for more State aid for the arts, especially in view of the amazing rise in prices of artistic works.

British galleries have not had enough money to compete with private and foreign buyers and, unable to plan ahead, curators saw themselves scooped on major purchases.

From July, 1947 until December, 1958, the greatest scientific exploration ever carried out took place. That was the International Geophysical Year. It was a carefully co-ordinated international scientific enterprise of unprecedented size and scope, with the object of learning more about our planet — and its place in relation to the vast universe.

The British contribution to this tremendous adventure was directed by the Royal Society of

Continuing the China Mail's Scoop on the Shah's great love:
Doctors were agreed that there was a chance but the Queen said 'No'

SORAYA had a SECRET FEAR

A PART from the Shah, Soraya, and a handful of the world's foremost gynaecologists, whom she consulted during her seven-year childless marriage, I am perhaps the only person outside Persian Palace circles who knows that, but for Soraya's fears, she might have produced an heir and still be Queen of Persia.

The frightened young Queen has travelled thousands of miles visiting specialists in Moscow, New York, London, and Switzerland.

But it was not until several days after the announcement of their divorce last March, that the tragic reasons behind it became known to me. I refused to disclose them for as long as I believed that a reconciliation was a possibility.

Today I can tell you that two of the world's greatest experts on fertility, one of them is Professor Ernst Held, of Zurich — have agreed and fully endorsed each other's opinions that a "minor operation" could have enabled Soraya to become a mother.

The Shah knew about it too, and in many endless weeks of pleadings and arguments, he implored Soraya, "ENTER A CLINIC AND I WILL REMAIN AT YOUR BEDSIDE DAY AND NIGHT."

NO DANGER

Doctors told them that the operation would take only three days to perform, and they assured Soraya and the Shah: "It is not in the least dangerous and will very likely solve your problems."

Soraya was no longer the rather awkward, tomboyish girl with solid shoulders and heavy thighs as in the days when we were neighbours at Zurich before she met the Shah.

Happiness and wealth had transformed her into the beauty the whole world knows today. Yet she herself told me: "I have seen every known specialist and they cannot agree. None has told me that I cannot have children. That is the agony of my ordeal, and I am going through a living hell."

At that time, the Shah and his Queen had recently returned from New York. They had seen President Eisenhower's doctor in the U.S. and on their return from New York they consulted Professor Rodolphe Rochat at Lausanne.

But it was at Zurich that Professor Ernst Held, who had already examined Soraya the year before, told her and the Shah: "My analysis is confirmed by my colleague in New York. A minor surgical operation is called for now."

Soraya gave her consent. But the same night at their Zurich lakeside hotel Soraya told the Shah: "I am too frightened." And she pleaded with him all night to delay the operation for another time.

That time never came. Each day as Soraya hesitated the Peacock throne of Persia, held by the Pahlavi dynasty for nearly 40 years, was in growing danger so long as Soraya did not have a son.

ONE HOPE

For there is only one man who can save Persia from the grip of revolutions which year by year sweep the Middle East and that man is the Shah.

While military and political coups upset neighbouring States the more reactionary of Persia's ruling families are determined to behave as though nothing had happened.

So the Shah is fighting what in effect is a lone battle against a corrupt officialdom and the indifference of absentee landlords. And in many ways the mainstay of his support is the

2,500-year-old tradition of the Persian monarchy, at once a symbol of national unity and of nationalism.

VISITS

There are two other factors which help the 30-year-old Shah:

Persia has a long common frontier with Russia — and its people have experienced Russian occupation — and.

Because they are non-Arab by race most of the Persian people view Nasser's Arab empire with great suspicion.

The Shah's only hope of continued mass support is for him to push through ruthlessly his announced programme of reforms.

He is proud of what he has achieved in Persia — more than 2,000,000 students against less than half that number five years ago — but recognises how much more there is to be done.

More than once in my audience with him the Shah mentioned "my loneliness" and said how urgently he needed a queen at his side, in the performance of duties of State.

As he himself said: "One cannot choose a wife as one chooses a shirt or even a new car."

A REALIST

He spoke to me about the clinics and agencies which have been established in various parts of Persia, and added: "The people have a right to expect their Queen to visit them," and he added: "We receive many visits by heads of State and I myself have gained great experience from our many visits abroad."

"But again, to receive and entertain there is a constant need for a Queen at my side."

And the lonely king spoke of the terrible earthquakes in his country and of the high number of casualties and loss of life.

"In time of distress and national disaster our people look to us for help and guidance."

"Alone I am inadequate in rendering all the comforts which a Queen could give them," he said. "That is another reason why I must remarry."

The Shah is too much of a realist not to recognise that, as a reigning monarch, he must assure the continuance of his young dynasty through an heir. And under the present constitution this can only be a direct male descendant of the Shah.

It was in an effort to forestall a political storm that in 1957 the Shah announced to his Parliament that he would accompany the Queen on a ten-day medical examination by four of Switzerland's leading specialists at the end of their State visit to Spain.

What greater proof both of the Shah's love for Soraya and of the depth of their dilemma? When they arrived in Switzerland they went immediately to Zurich, and the world waited for an announcement that Soraya had entered a clinic.

"NO MORE"

Instead, she went to cinema twice a day, but never near a doctor. By the end of the week the Shah took Soraya to Geneva.

There I talked with Soraya.

These were her words:

"No more doctors for me. I have seen enough doctors in the past three years to last me a lifetime. I have seen the best in the world. That is enough for me."

...THE MAN WHOSE MAGIC TOUCH TURNS UNKNOWN INTO HOLLYWOOD'S GREATEST NAMES

According to Zanuck he was "the most brilliant animal that ever lived."

Rin-Tin-Tin was probably the most talented of the stars Zanuck has since handled. He responded immediately when the director said "Action," turned his best angle to the camera, and lay down when he knew the scene was over, even before the director shouted "Cut."

He could do practically anything except write his own scripts.

But he was also as temperamental as any star Zanuck has since handled. Everyone who worked on the set was bitten at one time or another in one place or another by Rin-Tin-Tin. Zanuck escaped for two or three films, but his time was coming. The unit went on location to Oregon, when they were making a film titled Lighthouse on the Sea.

One of the scenes was filmed on a boat on a lake. When Zanuck was leaning over the side talking to the director, Rin-Tin-Tin, who presumably didn't approve of the script, saw his chance.

He bit. Zanuck finished the film, but shortly afterwards he ended his association with Rin-Tin-Tin and transferred his talents to general non-canine features. He never made another film starring a dog. And he never allowed himself to be caught with his back turned to an angry star.

Sudden farce

In the next year Zanuck scripted 19 films. His name appeared so often in screen credits the exhibitors started to complain that Warner Bros. should be able to afford more than one writer.

His bosses told him to think up some other names "and keep on turning the stuff."

One of the three pseudonyms he used under was Melville Cressman, who impressed a rival studio—M-G-M—so much that they offered him a contract. Zanuck, on Cressman's behalf, turned it down.

His writing may have been prolific, but his pay was poor.

BELLA DARVI... a meeting in a Riviera casino... and a chance of stardom.

CAGNEY, BETTE DAVIS, and HARRY DAVENPORT... three of Zanuck's stars in "The Bride Came C.O.D." one of his long list of successes with Warner Brothers.

How Bette Davis had her first film test

After four years he was earning only 125 dollars a week. But his reward was sudden and huge.

One night just before going home after a hard day over a hot typewriter he was told to report to Harry and Jack Warner, bosses of the studios.

He entered their panelled office apprehensively, wondering if one of his scripts had mislaid.

The brothers Warner invited him to sit down. They offered him a cigar. Brother Harry held out a gold lighter. Brother Jack said:

"We've just fired the studio executive producer. Who do you think should take over?"

Zanuck said he had no idea. Brother Jack went on: "I'll tell you. You take over. Starting tomorrow at 5,000 dollars a week."

Zanuck dropped the cigar. When he was dazedly passing through the studio gates the watchman whispered:

"They've flung the boss out. Wonder who'll get the job?" Zanuck said: "I've got it."

The watchman laughed hysterically and incredulously.

Other Hollywood citizens laughed too. At 24 Zanuck was the youngest-ever executive producer. At that age, said the laughter, he lacked the experience and knowledge to rule a big studio.

They underestimated Darryl Francis Zanuck. He strutted into command with Napoleonic naturalness.

The stunner which for years interrupted the flow of his aggressive talk disappeared. His high-pitched voice began to develop a cutting edge.

His moustache sprouted into the inverted V shape he still favours, which gives him the bold, defiant air of a Mexican bandit.

New ideas

The Warner brothers had made a shrewd choice. Zanuck stepped up their production. He brought new vitality, new ideas, new stars to their studios.

On a visit to New York he went to see a play called Penny Arcade. His interest was caught by two young players, a blonde with an infectious smile and a stocky young man with an electric spring in his step.

Zanuck looked up their names in the programme: Joan Blondell and James Cagney.

He went backstage after the show and met them in Cagney's dressing-room.

Cagney looked at Zanuck's embryonic moustache and said:

"You look too young to be the boss. You must be the boss's son."

He passed the card to Miss Blondell, who looked at it sceptically. She said:

"New York's full of young wolves with phoney business cards and phoney offers of film tests. If you're the big boss of the film studios I'm Rin-Tin-Tin's mother."

Fascinated

Zanuck left angrily, but next day he instructed the New York office to send an older, dignified-looking executive to make them a formal offer to come to Hollywood.

When they first arrived and entered his office Zanuck was standing beside his desk. Rin-

She wasn't the comely blonde type like Miss Blondell. She wasn't an all-American beauty. Her eyes were too big. Her gait was ungainly. She jerked across the floor like a neurotic hen.

In Zanuck's opinion, Barrymore was "one of the greatest actors who ever breathed."

When Barrymore was criticised for his drinking habits Zanuck would say: "Sure he drinks too much but even when he's drunk he can out act anyone sober."

At a party they attended together another Hollywood actor told Barrymore he was a disgrace to the profession.

Barrymore recited a long speech from a play the actor had attempted on Broadway the previous season. Barrymore gave it more meaning than the actor had ever done and then challenged him to walk in a straight line by the edge of the swimming pool. Protected by the alcoholics' good fairy Barrymore walked straight. The actor fell in.

About this time there were unmistakable signs that the talkies had advanced beyond the experimental stage.

But Zanuck had just completed Noah's Ark, which was to be the biggest silent epic of them all.

When it was previewed the audience received it enthusiastically.

Zanuck, however, in a characteristic gesture, withdrew it and remade sections of it with a sound track, bringing the cost to well over a million dollars.

At its second showing it flopped disastrously.

These new-fangled talkies, said the Hollywood pundits, are doomed.

And so to this guy Zanuck... London Express Service.

Revenge proved not-so-sweet for "Scarface"

CHICAGO in the 1920's was no place for a law-abiding citizen. It was a citadel of uncontrolled, and uncontrolled, sin.

Gun-toting thugs not only mowed each other down in the streets but anyone else fool enough to get in the way. Gang warfare was rife. It was the hey-day of the big racketeers.

One of the biggest of them all was the sinister, heavily built "Scarface" Al Capone. It was reckoned that more than 500 men died in his orders.

Yet the police could not touch him. No one would testify against him. Any potential squealers were taken "for a ride"—and never came back.

Greedy for power

So Capone ruled, violently, amazing one great fortune after another—until that grim St Valentine's Day of 1929, just 30 years ago.

Then Capone brought off his bloodiest coup of all. Seven men died brutally that day on his orders—but he had overstepped his mark. An outraged public would take no more.

February 14, 1929, was a grey, but fine day in Chicago. All over the world lovers were remembering each other, the postmen were delivering anonymous, frivolous messages.

But there was no love in the heart of Al Capone. He was the malevolent instinct which had sown the seed of his latest plot in his twisted mind.

It was inevitable that Capone and his mob should clash with Bugs Moran's gang.

Judas kiss

Both were gang chiefs with boundless ambition and greedy for more power. Both were deeply involved in the illicit liquor racket. Both were stop-at-nothing killers.

To add fuel to the fire two of Capone's key men had been shot down just before that grim St Valentine's Day, on Moran's orders.

So with terrifying thoroughness Capone set his plan in motion.

On Wednesday, February 13, Bugs Moran received a "phone call." A truckload of liquor was waiting at Meyer's garage in Clark Street... could he pick it up next morning?

Moran agreed. A time was fixed. He had no cause to suspect trouble—the message was from one of his most reliable contacts; a trusted member of the gang.

But that phone call was the Judas kiss. The trap was set. In Chicago's Clark Street the next morning life went on its drab, monotonous way. Clark Street was a peaceful area; the sort of place where nothing ever happens.

Block 210 was fairly typical—a few houses, a few shops, and lay on the stone floor.

The entire neighbourhood was roused by the shooting. Housewives and their menfolk rushed to the windows to see what had happened.

But Capone had even bargained for that. What they saw was three "policemen" leading away two men in civilian clothes.

Obviously it was a "fair cop."

So the St Valentine's Day Massacre went unavenged... but not quite.

The police were unable to pin any criminal charge on Al Capone, but they knew he was behind the killings. And this time they were determined to put him behind bars.

His days as the King of the Gangsters were drawing to a close.

From then on he was hounded. He was charged and charged again with one trifling offence after another.

Where criminal charges failed the police found they could gather evidence on taxation charges. So he was charged with evading income tax.

It was still going to be tough. Capone had too many friends to be convicted—without a struggle. Yet that is just what happened.

Contrary to all beliefs he pleaded guilty. The police were amazed—but quick to take advantage of the heaven-sent opportunity.

Given 10 years

During the trial Capone explained he wanted to go to jail. Again he had made a miscalculation—by underestimating the probable length of his sentence.

He tried to change his plea—but it was too late. The judge was adamant. In his refusal, Capone was sentenced to 10 years, and still his downfall was not complete.

In jail, even the hoodlums he had been brought up with turned against him. As a powerful man they had feared and respected him.

His former friends and allies ganged up against him; bullied and taunted him. For the duration of his sentence he was persecuted.

After one particularly vicious incident when a fellow convict tried to knife him, his nerve finally gave way. He broke down and wept.

His career, stormy and spectacular, was over. When he was released he was a sick man. He retired to lead a quiet life.

In 1947 he died. It was not a fitting end for the king of the Gangsters. He passed away peacefully... in his sleep.

By GRAHAM WILSON

A large garage which had its entrance in the back alley.

Moran's gang arrived on schedule at the garage. Moran and a couple of others were the only latecomers—and that saved their lives.

As they strolled towards the meeting place a saloon pulled into the kerb a few yards away from the garage. Three men in police uniform and two in civilian clothes stepped from the car.

The "policemen" burst in on this scene with guns at the ready. Resistance was obviously useless. The gang raised their arms without a protest and allowed themselves to be "frisked" for weapons.

They obeyed the terse "police" orders implicitly. Acting on orders they moved over to another part of the garage and lined themselves up against the wall.

Still unsuspecting—and still acting on orders—they turned to face the wall. Then, in brutal cold-blood, they were mown down where they stood, in a few staccato bursts of gunfire.

Scarface Al Capone had taken his revenge. With terrible precision his fake policemen had carried out their plan. In 10 brutal seconds seven corpses

Three named

After three weeks they named three men wanted in connection with the shooting—Joseph Lolorio, Fred Burke, and James Ray.

Lolorio disappeared. Burke and Ray were both fugitives from several American states, anyway. They could not be found.

Then the spotlight fell on two other Capone henchmen—John Scallia and Jack McGurn. Scallia made a quick exit when a gangster's bullet hit him.

Only McGurn remained to stand trial. The State tried to make the charge stick, but their evidence was flimsy. The trial dragged on while the State sought more evidence.

It was never forthcoming. After 10 months the prosecution gave up. McGurn was freed.

A New Concept in Writing
Inspired by Nature Itself!

Parker 61
capillary action pen

Just as the natural force of gravity controls this centuries-old hourglass, so too are natural forces called upon to control the ink in the Parker 61. The amazing Parker 61 fills itself with just the right amount of ink, then moves the ink into a vacuum-controlled reservoir where it cannot escape to leak or blot. Only when you are ready to write, when the nib is touching paper, does the flow of ink resume, producing a clean, uniform line. Enduring in quality, virtually shockproof and leakproof, the Parker 61 achieves a new standard in performance... reliability made possible by nature's own capillary action.

LETTER FROM A HEADLESS GHOST

What's in a name?

MANY visitors, after passing through such aromatic districts as the Central Market, Yaumatei, and the back streets of Tsimshatsui, are delighted to be told that the name, Hongkong, perhaps better pronounced Hong Keung, is translated as Fragrant Harbour.

I have no intention of starting an argument, and the only forthright statement I will permit myself to say that, in its origin, the name Hongkong was not applied to the whole of the Island.

There are two Chinese characters, and although we Europeans have run several of the Chinese characters together to pronounce them in a manner approximating to the Chinese phonetic rendering, I should say we are wrong. After all, who asks for Whitehorsewhisky?

Every Chinese character has its own meaning, and it is my contention that all Chinese place names should be rendered in mono-syllabic form to better render the Chinese sense.

So Hongkong should be pronounced Heng Keung. Of the first character, there is little doubt for the Englishman. Its meaning is fragrant, in the sense that incense is fragrant. It cannot be given the abstract wider form that the English word, fragrant, can be given.

The character Keung means harbour. But the reason for this name is hard to find. I am aware of most theories, and I have turned up several references concerning the name. I think the best thing to do is to say something on how the name, Hongkong, was first used by the British, and you can then please yourself as to which theory you find most apt.

Originally, when the Island was almost a deserted rock, the Spanish sailors called it the "Ladrones," the same name they gave a group of islands that still bear that name.

Later we find Hongkong is known to the Chinese as Hung Heung Loo To, the Isle of the Red Incense Burner.

The latter I find interesting, for I came upon such an explanation at the School of Chinese, attached to the University of Hongkong.

Our teacher pointed to the similarity between the Peak and an incense burner, and advanced the theory that there could be some explanation on that account. We have to wait for the early nineteenth century before we find the name Hongkong figuring in British ken.

Vessels of the East India Company, often used the anchorage at Aberdeen, and frequently took on water supplies from the waterfalls near Aberdeen, marked on modern maps as Waterfall Bay.

But the whole difficulty about the thing is what has a pure stream to do with fragrant harbour?

For this fresh water stream, running down the hillside, became famous in the emigrants' legends, and asking the name of the place, they were told Heng Keung.

Now I will add confusion to confusion. The people who were really friendly to the foreigners were the Tanka, or boat people, in pointing to the Island in the direction of the waterfall where they were anchored, the British sailors would ask the name.

The boat people would reply in their dialect Hongkong, meaning fragrant stream. It needed only the word Keung (in their tone) to be mistaken for Kwong, a servant, to find where the British translation for Hongkong, Fragrant Harbour, originated.

The rest is easy. Entering the name Hongkong on their charts, the British mariners mistook the local designation of Hongkong, and applied it to the whole Island.

Sai Yin Poon, or Western Camp, has nothing to do with the camp established near West Point, by the Military a century ago. It goes back to about 1800, when the British, Cheung Po, established three camps or fortified positions on the Island. His Eastern one was at North Point, and his central fortified position was just below the site occupied by the Central Police Station.

Another tragedy

Diffident Charlie always felt that if he wore a broad, strong belt as well as braces, there would be no risk of a calamity.

At last one night in Chislehurst both articles of clothing burst, and in a huff his Uncle Bill cut Charlie's name out of his will.

REMARKING, "One thing I abhor is trousers trailing on the floor."

The whole bag of tricks

EVERYBODY who has read about Mr. Mikoyan's bonhomie in America must have waited in confidence for the climax. Surely there would be a photograph showing him being kind to children. And, after some delay, there it was, a picture of the distinguished representative of a country is caught by the camera at such a moment. Big Business smiles through its teeth and glimpses a vision of a better world. "Why, he's human!" yowled a million-aires. If he comes here and strokes a dog, we're done for.

Oh, I say, look here!

THE screams of people being tortured, interpolated in a broadcast of a long-playing record of a Wagner opera, cannot be regarded as anything but an abuse of subliminal advertisement of a horror-film.

(Report of Glenbow Art Circle.)

Try this game

"AN epigram, or what passes for an article, will do more to win you a reputation for cleverness than any amount of conversation." That is true. Watch people's faces when you say dogmatically, "Tchekov was the Debussy of literature," or "Rembrandt's shadows reveal more than all Tiepolo's sunlight," or "Scribe and Sardou were masons, not architects," or "Grieg's songs are Turgenev set to music." It is as easy as falling off a tip cocktail stool.

Wise words

Exiling is coming to be regarded as a process similar to that of putting petrol in the tank.

CHESS

by LEONARD BARDEN

Here is a position from a game won by the young English master Peter Clarke. White to move and win.

London Express Herald.

By

JOHN LUFF

Many places in Hongkong and the surrounding district receive their names from a fancied resemblance to a familiar object. Thus the old name for Causeway Bay, Tung Lo Wan, which means Brass Gong Bay. This name has little significance now because reclamation has taken away the ancient contours of Causeway Bay. Ting Lung Chau, or the Island of Lungkings, a new Kellott Island. Shau Ki Wan means Silver Bay.

Ap-li-chau, just off Aberdeen means in Chinese, Duck's Tongue Island. Both Chinese and British now use the same name for Cheung Chau; Long Island. But a generation ago, it was quite common to refer to it as Dumb-bell Island, at least illustrating that the British could be as fanciful in their names as the Chinese.

Everyone who takes a car through the New Territories is familiar with that rock formation that juts out against the skyline. Known now to all as Amah Rock, it has been called by the British, Amah and Child, and Statue Rock. The Chinese name is Mon Fu Shek, which has the meaning of the wife looking for her husband.

Lye Mun, our entrance to Hongkong harbour, has the meaning, Grap Fish Gate; and as far as I am able to gain anything from local folk lore, it refers to an enormous fish which lived in these waters, pecking when he might devour.

At the other end of the Harbour is Kap Shui Mun, literally, Rapid Water Gate. No doubt many of our local yachtsmen could testify to the fact that this latter is well named.

The Chinese mark their maps at North Point with characters which convey exactly that meaning. But formerly, the small bay there was known as Tait Chi Mut, or Seven Sisters' Bay. Legend has it that Seven Sisters committed suicide at this unhappy spot, and the Chinese name commemorates this sad story.

I have never heard the Chinese name for the lower end of Stubbs Road, but once it must have been fairly common, for the rural areas I am using denote it. Kwai Tuen Lung, which could be translated, "The Dragon injured by road excavation." Maybe a visit to this spot will reveal the Dragon's injuries.

The next I can vouch for. It is only recently that Robinson Road has lost its ancient appearance. The rapid building of the huge blocks of flats have completely obliterated its ancient landmarks. But when I first arrived just after the war, and was sent to live in Conduit Road, both Robinson and Conduit Roads were peaceful rural areas where one could stroll leisurely.

But at one spot, where the road narrows and winds, one dare walk at night, and once I saw, on Ghost Night, certain fires lighted to placate the headless ghost who claimed that area. And so that area was known as Man Kwai Kui, or Pierce Ghost Bridge.

Since writing this, I have received the following.

"Sir, 'Regarding your reference to Man Kwai Kui, the motor traffic has rendered my walk too dangerous. I can assure you it is too risky to further haunt this area.'"

"Yours etc."

"The Headless Ghost."

These are but a few of the picturesque names which recall Old Hongkong, and it will well repay the reader to get a map, printed in both Chinese and English, and to do a little research on his own account.

Take for instance Jervels Street and Bonham Strand; these two thoroughfares recall a disastrous fire of 1851.

On December 28, 1851, during a considerable gale, a fire broke out in what was then known as Sheungwan Market.

His Excellency Sir Francis Henry May, K.C.M.G., who became Hongkong's Governor in 1912. May Road was named after him.

In spite of heroic efforts made by the Royal Engineers, some hundreds of Chinese houses to the north of Queen's Road were destroyed, and about thirty lives were lost.

After the holocaust, the whole area was rebuilt with considerable improvements and the most eastern and western streets were named Jervels Street and Bonham Strand.

Jervels Street was so named after Major General Jervels, who personally directed the Royal Engineers in fighting the fire.

Mr. Hillier died the same year as he left Hongkong.

Gough Street, like Mount Gough, was named after Major-General Sir Hugh Gough, General Officer Commanding troops out here when Hongkong became British.

He earned immense respect from the early Chinese settlers in the Colony, so much so that upon his departure in 1859, a huge Chinese procession formed up at Taipingshan, and proceeded to the residence of Mr. Hillier. They carried presents and an address which recorded that Hongkong was losing an upright and honest friend.

The newspapers were not so definite, and printed the following ambiguous statement: The Colony has lost one of the most honest, conscientious and straightforward of its servants."

Mr. Hillier died the same year as he left Hongkong.

Gough Street, like Mount Gough, was named after Major-General Sir Hugh Gough, General Officer Commanding troops out here when Hongkong became British.

Aberdeen Street, as the village of the same name, was named after the Earl of Aberdeen who was Foreign Secretary during the 1840s.

Stanton Street was named after Sir George Stanton, the famous translator of the original statutes of the Taitung Dynasty (the penal code of China). This was done that as far as possible, the penal code of Hongkong should conform where desirable to the penal code of China.

Sir George Stanton was a trusted servant of the East India Company long before the British came to Hongkong, and later, as a Member of Parliament, he strongly supported the policy of Sir John Davis in the face of much current criticism, that if trade was to be established here, then a British outpost was necessary, away from the squeeze of the avaricious mandarins.

Fashion's Young Dictator makes some confessions

Yves St. Laurent talks to Joy Matthews

'I do not have any real woman in mind when I create my collections'

LOOKING pale and even more like the Bernard Buffet portrait of himself than seems possible, Yves St. Laurent, now the ripe age of 22, sat more easily in the throne of office than I remember seeing him do a year ago.

But it is a throne as remote from the realities of the world he lives in as a monk's cell.

"I do not have any real woman in mind when I create my collections," he told me. "The only woman in my thoughts is the woman in my drawings, and later the mannequin on whom I make the dress. I never visualise a woman walking in the streets, shopping, or boarding a bus when I design.

"Once the collection is done I do not think of the clothes I have designed any more.

"I lose interest completely and I rarely see anyone wearing one of my designs. Whether made here or off-the-peg, each looks as perfect as the actual model I make on the mannequin."

M. St. Laurent denies that there is a big turn-over of fashion in Paris.

"Only every 10 or 15 years is there a great revolution. In my own collection, for example," he said, "a quarter is for the 'hemlines.' The rest is purely evolution of style, as there must be continuity, so that women really can wear their clothes more than one season."

A CHANGE

His taste, however, has changed considerably in the last 12 months. For example, he no longer worships the eighteenth century nor is his favourite colour black.

He likes both bright and pastel colours, but he was wearing blue from head to toe—suit, tie, and pullover. Only his shirt was palest blue and his shoes were good, strong English black.

Excellent for the aged and convalescent.

VERONICA PAPWORTH

UP SKIMMED A SUNBURNED MAN WITH A BRILLIANT SMILE AND A STRANGE, HYPNOTIC CHARM

I glide into a world where years don't count

Auron (Alpes-Maritimes). I AWAKENED this morning in the room from which Christian Dior once wrote: "I will think often of this rosy happiness and the mountains." I awakened to the sound of music and a scene that Bruegel might have painted.

In their scarlets, yellows, and vivid blues, the skaters were out early in the sunshine, was irresistible.

I had never before had the faintest desire to skate, but it was irresistible.

Once into some borrowed boots I was introduced to a modified version of a kitchen chair or skis, and, swimming to the music, I set off—pushing all before me.

Several times I circled the rink. Then up skimmed a darkly sunburned man with a brilliant smile. "Ah, Mademoiselle, throw away that thing. Slowly... slowly... like a bird... the arms like wings. To the right... to the left."

Portrayed without exaggeration

It was Antoine—cutting intricate figures around me as he changed encouragement.

Antoine, the greatest French hairdresser there has ever been, Antoine—who once slept in a glass coffin, commissioned his own tomb, dyed his dog blue, and invented the shingle—he whom Fernandel portrayed without exaggeration in Coffeur des Dames.

As a fashion writer, I can find no words for this man. How many times have I described a mere evening wrap as "fabulous"... a nonsense of a hat as "fantastic."

Antoine is the MOST. His exuberance is real and utterly spontaneous.

Such is his strange, almost hypnotic charm that I found myself skating with him, making bird movements—"The right wing, then the left"—while his thoughts chased themselves around my head.

"It can't be he—skating like this. Friend of Lady Mendl—of Coco Chanel, Schiaparelli, Chevalier, Mistinguett—however old can he be?"

Beating, beating all the time

I continued my birdlike movements until, flushed with success, I skated across the rink alone. Then over a cup of coffee Antoine supplied the answer.

We were talking of Chanel and her astonishing "come-back."

"She is old," said he, "but (proudly) I am older. I am 70. Since he looks about 55, my attachment was not simulated."

"How do you do it, Antoine?" "It is simple. I eat little—no little—like a sparrow. I get close—so close—to nature. And I have no bad thoughts."

"Please explain about nature." "It is the rhythm of life that I feel, beating, beating all the time. To so many people a tree is a tree. But when I am close to a tree I become one. I am feeling the sap rising in me."

"There is a pulse I feel—it is perhaps the heart of the world beating."

"So today, when you have skated, you have been in love with the sun and the snow—you have been at one with the ice, yes?"

Each day an adventure

"Yes," said I, a little doubtfully, feeling my bruises—"And explain about the bad thoughts, please."

"A materialistic way of life—that is bad. Money, possessions, power—love of these things is written on the face. Jealousy, greed, and envy turn the stomach sour—make illness inside. I have no such thoughts."

"Each day is a new day—an adventure."

"But if you weren't a successful man would it be so?"

"When I was poor my aim was always the same."

"I arrived in Paris from Warsaw, with an astrakhan hat, a Catholic Prayer-book, and five gold pieces sewn into my overcoat."

"But from the beginning I was happy. Send out happiness—it makes a great circle."

"He swept his arms wide. "And it will return, bringing so much with it."

Imitation Bardots by the dozen

At night it seems the bars of this very gay little town are filled with imitation Bardots. I have a theory that the management orders them up by the dozen as required for decoration.

Some wear their hair down their backs—some pile it high. All, without exception, wear pale lipstick and spend their time pouting. Which is, I suspect, singularly difficult to do. Especially while drinking.

In spite of their uniform appearance their success, flirtation-wise, varies considerably, and I am constantly reminded of Dorothy Parker who wrote: "Some men break your heart in two."

Some men fawn and flatter, Some men never look at you, And that clears up the matter."

Why is the ginger-blondie Bardot surrounded while the rose-blondie Bardot sits alone? They seem as like as two peas to me—and the men "clear up the matter" in their usually inexplicable manner.

A RUSTIC THEME IS AT HOME EVEN IN A CITY SETTING

WE found it difficult to believe what we saw at a recent home furnishings show. Every one of the principal settings featured the living-in-the-country theme, even those intended for the real case-hardened city slicker!

In the midst of central heating systems and air conditioning, there were various old-fashioned stores, looking perfectly at home in their pseudocity surroundings! Milk stools, old-type lamps, chintzes and furniture with a distinctly country air dominated the settings, all of which were mighty handsome and rich in ideas.

For, frankly, fake as well as the real thing, was used in many settings.

One of the most attractive was a living room for a city apartment in which a sophisticated effect was cleverly devised out of a rustic theme. The sofa was upholstered with fake fur and an old-fashioned iron stove dominated one wall. The walls were of weathered board, but brass strips between the boards not only gave height to the room but added elegance.

In a dining corner, Blaker-meyer chairs, lacquered in red, were set against a handsome brass and wood wall. At the windows were felt tie-back draperies.

In honour of the admission of Alaska as the 49th state of America a famous decorator did an amusing setting, featuring an igloo-shaped dining room. Chairs of elk's horn, a wood plank floor, fur on the walls and, as appected, an iron stove and furnishings with a distinctly rural flavouring made the room colourful, cosy and cheerful.
Floor treatments caused considerable comment.

One designer took inspiration from a pre-revolutionary quilt for a vinyl flooring in the dining section of his living room.
On the other side of the room,
he used the quilting pattern for a handsome area rug.

WOOL ON THE HEAD

by GINA POPESINA

ON the Continent most women are handy with their knitting needles and crochet hooks, and the majority of them make up their own patterns. These arts, plus oddments of wool, have produced much attractive head-wear at small cost.

The secret of sophistication often lies in an exciting hat. In Italy this Spring, women will go high hat! The young girl may think that she gets by with a wind-ruffled hair-do, but that's only until she meets the smilingly haughty woman. Therein is much of the difference between the experimenting teenagers and the initiated twenties —and later.

Hats are extremely important wool jersey turbans in skillful colour combinations of several shades.

For Spring, however, the leading designers are continuing the "wool-on-the-head" theme, but in very lightweight wool and extremely arresting shapes. Perhaps they have been influenced by the current space-and-moon travel, for many of the newest styles climb extremely high and are often balloon like. For the woman who needs a few extra inches they will certainly prove a blessing.

Those who have the courage and ability may want to copy these hats as closely as possible.
Failing that—and more's the pity—you can start with a moderated version and, liberally and otherwise, work your way

YOUR BIRTHDAY . . . By STELLA

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9

BORN today, you are highly sensitive and inclined to be impressionable. You seem to know the true motivations of others and are a fine analyst of character. You are able, at first meeting, to judge a person's individuality. Your likes and dislikes are strong, but you keep your opinions to yourself until asked for them. You also have a keen social consciousness but may suggest your crusading under the guise of fiction. Something of a reformer at heart, you know how to present your case for popular consumption.

You have a social nature and are quite gregarious. Nothing pleases you more than having a whole crowd of people around whom you can converse—even argue. You also have a touch of gypsy-foot and in youth may want to keep moving from one place to another. New experiences, you believe, are necessary for you. When you wed, be sure to select some one who enjoys the same sort of a life or there can be trouble ahead.

You have the artistic temperament which goes along with talent and are inclined to be moody. If you find a bit of melancholia coming on, make a quick change of pace. No matter what you're doing, do something different! The change will do you a lot of good. For example, if you are studying too hard, physical exercise often will turn your mood from a sad to a glad one.

Among those born on this date are: Osgy Gabriowitch, pianist; Charles Dickens, Sinclair Lewis and Pierre Van Passen, authors; George Palmer Putnam, editor and publisher.

To find what the stars have in store for you tomorrow, select valuable today! Develop it at proposal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 23)—

general interest might bring out important facts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 22)— Change is in the air and it might prove just the thing for you today. Accept it!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 23-Jan. 20)—
If you are an avid "do-it-yourself-er," then this might be a good time to fix the radio.

BORN today, you have exceptional potentialities but are not inclined to utilize them to the utmost. You have a good mind but are mentally lazy. You have a forceful personality, but are inclined to sink into deep moods of depression without any apparent cause. There are times when your natural wit makes you the centre of attraction anywhere and then, at other moments, you are so quiet as to appear withdrawn, even aloof.

If you will take the initiative rather than let yourself be pushed around, you can have a thoroughly successful life and reach an exceptional success. However, if you merely sit around, waiting for things to happen, you will find that your life becomes a dull routine of just making a living.

Each day select one thing you especially want to accomplish.
Finish it—and then begin another. In this orderly manner, you will find that you are progressing steadily toward an outstanding accomplishment. The little successes turn into major achievements.
In marriage select someone who is your opposite. You enjoy the comforts of your own home and you will achieve your greatest happiness in the social life of your own surroundings among your family and a few intimate friends.

Among those born on this date are: William H. Harrison, U.S.
President; Anthony Hope, author; Amy Lowell, poet; William Bartram, botanist; Irvin Shaw, author-playwright.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10

BORN today, you are a rather strange combination of characteristics. You have a fine mind and are interested in deep, cultural things, yet you are such a highly social individual that you enjoy the company of people quite as much as you enjoy your books. In fact, there are times when the two areas of your major interests seem to conflict seriously and you will have to decide which things are the ones you want most out of life.

You have imagination and a gift for the written word. On the other hand, you think that actions speak more loudly than language. You have a keen sense of humour and a keen memory for any good joke you may have ever heard. You enjoy talking and will often argue a point just for the pleasure of arguing. You would make a fine trial lawyer, since you are able to gauge the calibre of your jury and turn your arguments in exactly the right direction.

You enjoy novelty and are always ready to try anything new.
You have an interest in science, but whether you would make a serious scientist will depend to large degree upon how early you start specialising and how seriously you take yourself. Learn to evaluate your talents more seriously and you will succeed fairly easily.

Among those born on this date are: William Tecumseh Sherman, Union general in the Civil War; Richard Watson Gilder, noted editor and poet; Samuel Butler, poet; John Ruskin, commentator; Jules Verne, author.

To find what the stars have in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday star and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 18)—
Your hopes may now be more fully realised, especially in regard to children's affairs.

PISCES (Feb. 20-Mar. 20)— Changes can affect both home and business affairs. If travelling, exert due caution.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 20)—
Be on guard against an unexpected change in your affairs.
Avoid risk-taking.

TAURUS (Apr. 21-May 21)—
Not a good day for making deals in money or business arrangements. Exert caution.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21)— Relax tensions today and you will find that you feel better.
Watch your health.

CANCER (June 22-July 23)— Today's trends may indicate the direction that future events may take.

LEO (July 24-Aug. 23)— Your energies will be high, but make sure that they are wisely directed for best effect.

VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 23)— A social contact may make an important change in your future professional conduct.

LIBRA (Sept. 24-Oct. 23)—
If you are alert to what is going on around you, a sudden switch in emphasis can be unimportant.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 23)—
An important week for all your efforts. Business and legal affairs come to the fore.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 22)— Watch your relations with others today. There can be tensions unless you remain calm.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 23-Jan. 20)—
Better for you to postpone a trip if at all possible. Conditions should be better next

The Style Setters

Next week they'll cause a new uproar!

by ANNE EDWARDS

SOMEWHERE at this very moment is an unknown battering away, perhaps at a new play in the back streets of Derby
—a playwright John Osborne once did.

Or working away in a Victorian attic at Greenwich at a new kind of painting—as painter John Brabhy once did.

Or sweating in some dark little Paris workshop at a new idea in dress—as Christian Dior once did.

And one day soon the Unknown will meet his V.I.P.
(Very Influential Person) who is prepared to back his ideas—a theatrical producer like George Devine or an art con-noisseur like Sir Colin Anderson, or a textile magnate like Marcel Boussac.

And bingo, a new trend in living, a new turn of thought, a fresh approach to painting, tripping into the light—to shock you, intrigue you, and finally enchant you.

So fresh

Today I report on some of the Style Setters who are shooting out fresh ideas.

Although many of them start in the heart of London, although many only a rich man can afford, and many mount extreme—I predict that they will spark off in you a new attitude to the dress you wear, the picture you hang on your wall, the wallpaper you choose for your bathroo.

Her garden

Jay Jellicoe, pace-setting in houses by making her sitting-room look as if it was in the middle of a garden. "It was just an old Victorian room with windows in the wrong place," she said.

"I knocked a side wall out so that it could open on to a roof garden, and put double glass doors in instead."

"In the summer you draw them back and room is part of the garden."

Cecil Beaton reviving the flashing taste for sentimental Edwardians—pointed strap shoes, floating mauve chiffon wicker-work furniture, gilded palms, in his costumes for "Gigi" and "The Doctor's Dilemma."

Cecil Beaton again, having his pale red head features painted in grisly style by nightmare painter Francis Bacon.

Mr. John Miller who has built a house of double glass near Headley entirely so that he can see the view.

Peter Sellers, who along with the Goons sets the style for today's new democratic slang
—"Buddy Mate," "You will
"Silly twisted" boy," "He's fallen in the water."

Anthony Denny, decoration editor of Vogue, whose ideas are being adopted by some of the richest home owners...the all-white room with white marble floor, white rugs, white chintz walls, walls covered in fabric (check cottons specially treated for kitchens and bathrooms), and fabrics that look like wallpaper; the new trend for cool colours, sludge, honey, brown and white; the coming trend for decorating ceilings.

Henrietta Marks, selling a high style in new toys for reclined dwellings—stereophonic sound which can be used for records, radio or tape-records.

Constance Cummings, blazing a cheerful trail for beauties over 40. She wears scarlet wool tights with one of her husband's pillowcases—and looks a treat.

And I'll tell you what will happen next....

This time, though, it will be for longer skirts (and more defined waistlines).

And I'll tell you what will happen next....

So popular

Lots and lots of girls will protest that never, never, never will they let their skirts down.

Several people will write to the newspapers, asking why women let themselves be pushed around by dress designers.

Someone famous and beautiful will be pictured in it.

And everyone will wear it.

—(London Express Services).

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Shabby or faded looking leather chairs: lightly whip the white of an egg and work it evenly with the aid of a soft cloth, over the leather.

Stained and grimy furniture:
wipe over with a solution of methylated spirits and warm water. Afterwards polish in the usual way.

There's nothing like a BOMB

says Hitchcock

HERE'S THE LATEST of the Crosby clan to enter show business—black-haired Cathy, daughter of Bob, niece of Bing. She has a singing role in THE BEAT GENERATION.

IN a chair in a room in an upstairs suite in a London hotel a small, rotund man sat talking to me about bombs.

It was early afternoon. The roar of London's traffic far below was muted by heavy drapes. There was nothing to disturb us.

The rotund man, who looked more like a successful family butcher than a celebrated film director, was enjoying himself.

Alfred Hitchcock, I may tell you, has an affection for bombs which borders on a fixation.

THE CARDINAL RULE

He sat there, his letter-box girth encased in a neat dark-blue suit, snuffing into a handkerchief and chuckling to himself.

"Yes," he said, sighing contentedly, there's really nothing like a good 'bomb' for scaring people."

He wagged an admonishing finger at me.

"However," he said severely, "one must never allow it to go off. Never."

That is a cardinal rule.

There is no terror in the actual bang, only in the anticipation of it. I learned that the hard way."

He waited for me to ask him how was that—so I asked him how was that?

"I once made a film in which a small boy was carrying a bomb across London," he said. "He didn't know he was carrying it—but the audience did."

"They knew, too, that it was timed to go off at 1 o'clock. I showed the boy being delayed in various ways—by the Lord Mayor's Show and that sort of thing—and then just before the bomb was due to go off I showed him riding on a bus. Lots of suspense."

"What happened then?"

"At three minutes past one," said Hitchcock, with what can only be described as a leer,

REPORTS A DISCOURSE BY THE MASTER OF SUSPENSE

The Hitchcock rule
—It mustn't go off.

"I blew them all up—bus, boy, and passengers. What a business. They never forgave me for that; one critic nearly hit me. I learned my lessons."

FOR INSTANCE....

Fifty-eight-year-old Hitchcock who recently lived up a snug-looking littled of passengers at his hotel by muttering to a friend:

"I didn't think one shot would cause so much blood; it was all over the place"—learned other lessons too.

"Logic," he said, snuffing again. "Is dull. None of my plots hold together logically. But if I stop to explain everything, there is no mystery. Look at some of my films. Ridiculous. For instance, in The Lady Vanishes, we had a trainful of villains out to kidnap an old lady who carried a secret message which she played on the piano. How absurd. Why didn't they use a carrier pigeon? It just didn't bear investigation—but it made a successful film."

"By that token," I said, "mystery writers should be useless for your pictures."

"They are," said Hitchcock sternly. "I hired Raymond Chandler for one of my films but it was no good. He was too preoccupied with logic."

ONE MISTAKE

"What about John Buchan—who wrote 'The 39 Steps,' one of your earliest successes?"

"When I filmed it with Robert Donat," said Hitchcock, "I completely changed it from the original book."

"Happily John Buchan admitted later that my version was more exciting than his. There was only one trouble—by an oversight we left out any reference to the steps. So we had to write in a few steps later."

He chuckled. "I thought of showing 39 steps each arriving with his own step, but that became too involved."

'A MYSTERY'

"I'm told," I said, "that you regard most actors as accessories to the plot and nothing more. Is that true?"

"Well," said Hitchcock, "the right star can help a film at the box-office, but he can't make it a better film."

"However, a good director can get a performance out of almost anyone—even someone like Kim Novak, although maybe that's going a little far. She is one of the great mysteries of show business. I used her in Vertigo."

"What about Grace Kelly—whom you discovered?"

"Well," said Hitchcock, "she seems a cold fish, but I managed to make her look sexy in To Catch a Thief. I was rather proud of that. Not bad for someone who's been married 33 years and never gone out with another woman."

IN TERROR

He snuffed into his handkerchief again, and looked at me rather sadly with near-wet eyes.

"I try new techniques in terror with every picture I do," he said. "The creaking door and dark-alley stuff have never appealed to me much."

"Is my new film, North by Northwest, I've got terror into a scene in which you can't see a thing for miles around."

"Ray Grant gets off a bus in a deserted part of country. It's been hard there by a trap—but only the audience knows this. Presently a car comes

Mr. Shaffer lands a blow for the rich...

PETER SHAFFER, winner of the Evening Standard award for the most promising new playwright of 1958, is a young writer of the benign rather than malignant sort.

Unlike the 1956 winner of the same award, John Osborne, he is not using the world as his personal punching bag.

Compared with Mr Osborne's vicious jabs, malevolent uppercuts and eye-opening lefts, Mr Shaffer's dramatic technique is closer to Ju-Jitsu.

Gentleel

His prize-winning play, Five Finger Exercise opens as innocently as a caress but very soon has the audience in a gentle half-Nelson. He doesn't hurt you, but, all the same, you cannot escape.

These somewhat more gentle tricks of holding an audience are appropriate to the man. His is not the kind of background that produces a snarling rebel, genius that consists of an infinite capacity for inflicting pain.

He belongs not much to the Beat Generation as to the Beat-up Generation. The subtly observed characters in Five Finger Exercise are all people in pain; and they lash out not at society, but at each other. His people are the over-privileged and theirs is a tragedy with all mod. cons.

Mr Shaffer has proved once and for all that the rich have as much right to unhappiness as the poor.

There is a surface conventionalism about his play which angers the angrier the drawing-early plays of Coward, and detests very little. He calls himself a "cautious optimist." He is non-political because he believes that "the complexity of life is such that any form of political dogma does a violent injustice to it."

The danger

Though Five Finger Exercise is now earning him £170 a week, there is little likelihood that success will dramatically alter his life. He has for some time lived very comfortably in Earl's Terrace, Kensington, and the rich life has never had, for him, the allure of the unattainable. He has been sufficiently close to it not to be unduly impressed.

"Of course," he admits, "success has its dangers. The moment you can pay other people to do the less agreeable chores for you you are to some extent cutting yourself off from life."

"I believe very strongly in the need for writers to buy their own potatoes at the greengrocer. I am sure that high-living is death to the creative writer. Mind you, I don't believe in the inspiration value of starvation either."

"I write out of tension, and to some extent writing eases the tension. But you've got to have the tensions in the first place. So tranquillity isn't a very good thing."

With his remarkable capacity for seeing how people devour each other emotionally, Mr Shaffer is in no particular danger of becoming too tranquil. (London Express Service).

room setting, the french windows leading off, the daughter in jodhpurs. This is where we walked out, one might justifiably think, recalling the innumerable dreary plays with similar settings.

But Mr Shaffer keeps us in our seats because he rapidly pulls away the conventional exteriors of these people and gets to their somewhat defective hearts.

That the 32-year-old, bespectacled and rather intellectual-looking Mr Shaffer should have chosen this particular milieu is perfectly natural: it is what he knows about.

Unlike Mr Osborne he has never known poverty, or the sting of rejection. His people are in the real estate business and own blocks of flats around London. Mr Shaffer has not had enough failure in his past to get the acid flowing in his system.

No quarrels

At the age of 21 he had his first novel published, a detective story, How Doth the Little Crocodile? He followed it with two more: Woman in a Wardrobe and Withered Nuts. These books had a reasonable success, particularly in America.

For a while he lived in New York, working in a public library and then in a bookshop. Though at one time he earned only 35 dollars a week, he could always, at a pinch, go home.

In these circumstances it is understandable that Mr Shaffer has no violent quarrel with society. He admits: "I have voted Labour twice and I have voted Conservative twice," and that he is now a Liberal.

Before writing Five Finger Exercise he had two plays done

Mr Shaffer, by contrast, admires Osborne, Samuel Beckett, some of Brecht, the

BARDOT AND KAYE

A CUTE IDEA, SAYS DANNY

NOW we present producer Raoul Levy's big gamble to salvage "Paris by Night"—the picture which was to have starred hip-slinger Brigitte Bardot and Frank Sinatra.

Levy, who saw his fiery formula fizzle last November when Sinatra backed out of the picture, snapping that the public would be sick of Miss Bardot by the time the film was made, is now wooing Danny Kaye to take over the role.

In London recently, Kaye said frankly: "Certainly Levy wants to team Bardot and me. The casting is kinda interesting, don't you think? Bardot and Kaye. It should arouse the curiosity of the public."

"The three of us had a long talk in Paris. I found her a very interesting woman, of course. If it works out it will start at the end of the year, probably in Europe."

But Kaye, who is not such a clown in the business stakes, added cautiously: "But 'Paris by Night'—frankly, I don't know that I'm THAT keen."

"You understand the script was written for Bardot and Frank Sinatra. I don't know a lot about it really. But I believe it would need considerable re-writing if I play it."

"I'm no Sinatra, you know. The way I see it, it would be cheaper and better to start again. But Bardot and Kaye? I like that. Cute, isn't it?"

FRANKIE VAUGHAN, after three years as Britain's top pop-singing star, is planning to change his name—for his Continental fans.

For Frankie, known as one of the most considerate stars in show business, thinks Vaughan is much too tough for the Germans to get their Teutonic tongues around. Says he sadly: "It comes out Vaughan."

So, on the Continent, Frankie Vaughan is likely to become France Vorn.

SONG-AND DANCE man

Dan Dailey is making his first series of half-hour TV films—39 adventure episodes based on "The Four Just Men"—at Walton-on-Thames. Has he forsaken song-and-dance? Says Dailey: "Movie musicals come in cycles. At the moment there aren't any. Even Astaire's making a straight picture and he's over 60. I'm a song-and-dance man. Never out of work. If this series work out I can always go and do a cabaret."

Marquand melts on Broadway

WOMEN AND THOMAS HARROW. By John P. Marquand. Collins, 16s.

THE theatre, as a subject seems to have a disastrously sentimental effect on most novelists, as it has had, in this case, on Mr Marquand.

His study of the life and loves of a successful Broadway dramatist is much more squelchy. The famous Marquand penny which called his earlier novels has vanished without trace.

Going back

When we first meet Thomas Harrow it is in the replica period house he has fashioned for himself and his unappreciative third wife in the New England town he was brought up in.

He is going back to his roots. His career had been one of unbroken success and effortless flattery ever since his first play as a young man had run for two years. Now suddenly he has staked all his life savings on a mystical about The Three Musketeers, and has lost the lot.

This disaster prompts him to turn over innumerable memories from his not very eventful life, to remember theatrical first nights and bridal first nights, theatrical squabbles and marital squabbles.

Above all, he remembers his first wife Rhona, the small-town girl he married just before his first success, and who, even then, was more interested in what he made than in what he did, and left him for a sounder proposition.

At the end of this long look back he comes to the conclusion that he has been bad at managing life and women, and is perhaps only a mediocre playwright after all (which by now we are quite ready to believe). And he almost—but not quite—deletes himself over a cliff.

It is all rather thin and whimsical, but Mr Marquand knows as much about writing novels as anyone in the business. It is skilfully organised and compulsively readable.

HERE'S A SCROUNGER YOU'LL PITY

THE UNSPEAKABLE SKIPTON. By Pamela Hansford Johnson. Macmillan, 15s.

TRUE comedy—as opposed to the merely funny—always has, it has been said, a sadness at its core. If this is so, Miss Hansford Johnson has, in this study of an artist with a split personality, written a true comedy.

Her Daniel Skipton is based on a real-life character, Frederick Rolfe, who called himself Baron Corvo, and believed himself a genius.

Daniel Skipton is, in one side of his personality, a wholly dedicated writer content only with absolute perfection in his craft, and who would sacrifice anything, his health, his life even, to get just one sentence exactly right.

The severe side of his perfectionism as an artist is his unscrupulousness as a man. He lady dramatist and her encouragement. They are marked down, pursued, studied and then systematically "touched" for small loans, odd meals, and in one of the funnier scenes in the book, the commission for a visit to a brothel.

Skipton determines to make them pay also for the humiliations he has suffered over them, and allows himself, on their last day, the luxury of telling them in public exactly what he thinks of them.

It is a final mistake which costs him every single franc he has managed to squeeze out of them, and leave him as poverty-stricken as when they arrived.

Skipton's story, at once ridiculous and sad, is told with immense high spirits, with considerable ingenuity in the plotting, and with a delightful feeling for its Belgian setting.

The strange case of a Judge

GRIEF COSTS HIM ONE FAME AND GIVES HIM ANOTHER

I DROVE past Wornwood Scrubs into the wilderness of railway lines and grey slate roofs which Londoners call Willesden. There in a drab, chill public hall I ended my quest for one of Britain's most successful authors.

On the author's head was a thick mouse-coloured wig. Above it, the royal coat of arms hung from a water pipe. An unusual setting for an author. But then this was an unusual author. He was His Honour Judge Henry Cecil Leon, Smoothly, he was presiding over the payment of debtors and Rent Act claimants at Willesden County Court.

Around me on the court's wooden benches, tense folk shuffled their feet in the cold. Nervous, defiant, like starlets before an audition, they waited for the cases in which they were involved.

But the case that interested me was different from the rest.

It was the case of Judge Leon himself.

Here was the dossier:—In barely ten years, under the pen-name of Henry Cecil, Judge Leon had produced a revolution in the book world. He has virtually ousted the doctor at the ready-made hero of popular fiction. In place of medicine Henry Cecil has firmly put the law.

In films and television Leon has also stamped his mark. His best-seller BROTHERS IN LAW (Michael Joseph, 10s. 6d.) did well at the box office. His mystery novel NO BAIL FOR THE JUDGE (now edition April 1959, 6d.) which has brought Hitchcock sniffing for film atmosphere in London, will do even better.

For note that novel's intriguing theme. Its hero is a judge who gets stunned in a street accident and wakes up in a room he has never seen before. Unfortunately for the judge the room's owner is not only a prostitute, but also happens to be lying murdered.

Some reviewers called the plot far-fetched. How, they asked, could a judge get into a scrape? But the truth is that fear of even the most innocent sort of trouble obsesses Leon. A barrister friend told me: "He's no teetotaler. But now he's a judge he refuses to go inside a pub because of the mere chance of some fight or argument breaking out."

A BRISK BOOK

Leon has not confined himself to funny books and thrillers. Last autumn he published BRIEF TO COUNSEL (12s. 6d.). It had a preface by Mr Justice Devlin. It was a brisk book of instruction for apprentice barristers.

Sample: "Few members of the public know what a leading question is, and a substantial number of legal practitioners have an incorrect notion of its meaning. You often hear people parry difficult questions in ordinary conversation by calling them—quite wrongly—leading questions.

SNAPPED UP

"Are you going to marry the girl?" "Ah, that's a leading question." "Well, it isn't." Leon explains that a leading question is one which puts the evidence into the witness's mouth. He gives these instances:—

Was your marriage a happy one?—No. Was that because your husband beat you?—Yes. If you asked him where he had been did he hit you?—Yes. Hard?—Yes.

Comments Leon: "Evidence obtained in that way is obviously unsatisfactory."

Brief to Counsel, you see, was not directed at the general reader. But the general reader has snapped it up. Since September it has been reprinted three times.

It is as if Richard Gordon managed to make a popular hit with a text-book on diseases of the respiratory tract.

Little wonder that Henry Cecil's publishers (who refuse to breathe the secret name of Leon) are happy about the prospects of his new novel, SETTLED OUT OF COURT, in which excitement and legal points are mixed in equal measure (Michael Joseph, 13s. 6d., to be published on March 10).

What is the explanation of Leon's rapid emergence as an author?

DETERMINED

Already, before coming to Willesden, I had discovered something about him which is more dramatic than anything in his novels.

In the Temple I talked to his friends, amongst the barristers and barristers' clerks. One of them said:—

"It surprised all of us when Leon gave up his practice and became a County Court judge in 1948. You see, he had his feet near the top rung then."

"He was only 47 and he was earning £7,000 a year. But a county court judgeship is an absolute dead end. You don't often become a High Court judge after that, you know."

Why then did Henry Cecil Leon make that unexpected change? For a wonderful reason.

In the Temple I learned how Leon, the brilliant and busy barrister, was told that his wife had only a few years to live. He was devoted to her. He was determined to spend hours with her every remaining day—something he could not possibly do while he depended on a busy practice.

So he gave up all his professional hopes and took up an obscure judgeship at a sacrifice of thousands a year.

ALMOST GUESTS

No sooner had Leon made this sacrifice than his wife died.

Already, while nursing her, Leon had tried writing a book. Now, desolate, he put all his wasted energy and brilliance into authorship.

But how has he found the inspiration in the acid atmosphere of petty civil claims which fills a county court? In that draughty hall in Willesden I watched Leon dispensing justice. He was kind and courteous. Chairs were brought forward for every witness. The defendants might have been Judge Leon's personal guests.

Then a remarkable procession entered the court. An old man, bent almost double, was led forward. He was blind, lame, deaf. His age was 82.

Eloquently the old man's counsel explained why, under the Rent Act, he should be allowed to stay on in his Golden Green flat. He had only his old-age pension and a small private income. His son, who looked after him, had been out of work because of bad health.

SO COURTEOUS

But the judge surprised me. He did not seem so sympathetic as I had expected. The witness-box the old man's son told how the flat had a certificate of disrepair: how the floor-boards were rotting and the walls ran with damp.

But the judge was not moved. He asked: "How does your father get his private income? What is his capital?"

At first the son said he did not know. But at last some of the facts came out. The pathetic old man had at least £5,000 invested plus factory premises which he let at £250 a year.

Judge Leon became his courteous self once more. But there was a glint of fun behind his spectacles. And I could see why.

For think what a picture had been conjured up. Think of the bent old man and his son living in their damp, dilapidated flat with share certificates for £5,000 and the deeds of a factory tucked away in a drawer.

Ten minutes in a county court had produced material worthy of Dickens, let alone of the genial and talented Henry Cecil.

Is there a colour bar in books?

WOULD you say that a colour-bar was exercised by intellectual people in Britain?

Just the reverse, you might reply. Why, there are intellectuals who will let Dr Nkrumah get away with the kind of oppression which would set them seething if it occurred in South Africa.

Yet here is an odd thing. Recently a novel called THE HIT, by Negro author Julian Mayfield, was published (Michael Joseph, 13s. 6d.).

It is the story of a middle-aged Harlem Negro whose whole life is built around the dream of making a big win in the betting system with New York calls "the Numbers Game."

The man's Negro neighbours, his tough wife, his numerous sons, are described not as comic-strip or as ordinary people with ordinary passions. The result is a tense and interesting novel.

Rightly it has earned excellent reviews in the newspapers and intellectual magazines. But hardly anyone has bothered to buy it.

Why? The publishers say: "Oh you can never sell a Negro novel in Britain nowadays."

VIVID

● RAPE OF THE FAIR COUNTRY, by Alexander Cordell: This novel about the rugged lusty Mortymers—a family of workers in the South Wales ironfields 120 years ago—has been compared with that pre-war best-seller How Green Was My Valley. I would rate it higher. Its writing has such fire that it hardly reads like history fiction at all.

It brings to vivid life all those bleak illustrations of misery among the nineteenth-century poor that are found in the history books. It pulses with pathos and laughter. According to the publishers, Auntie Brown recommends it. So do I. (Collins, 16s.)

Give Mother Breakfast In Bed

HAVE you ever thought what a nice surprise it would be for you to give mother breakfast in bed? It could be on her birthday, or Mother's Day—or any Saturday or Sunday. Or it need not be a special day to show mother how special she is to you.

Make something that you can enjoy with her, too. If mother usually drinks coffee or tea, she might like hot chocolate for a change. If you are not allowed to use the stove, you can still mix a delicious glass of chocolate milk. All you need to do is put one teaspoon of chocolate syrup into a glass of milk and stir until it becomes nice and creamy. Don't put in too much syrup. Mother can add more, if she would like it darker.

Don't make anything fancy. It is what you do and how you do it that counts the most.

If you have a garden and some flowers are in bloom, you can make a corsage. Pin the flowers on some cardboard, colour it, and tie the stems with a pretty ribbon bow, or you can put a few flowers in a water glass just to make things look bright and cheerful.

If your mother doesn't have a tray on which you can carry in her breakfast, use a big ream of paper or a square cake pan. This is even better than a tray since the four sides all around will keep you from dropping things when you walk in to say hello mother. Also, the four-sided pan will keep the food from wobbling around when mother is eating. You can put a paper doily on the bottom of the pan so that it looks dressed up. And don't forget napkins.

DON'T CARRY in everything at once. It is easier to carry in a few things at a time. Bring in the things that go together. If you think it would be easier, you can make the birthday breakfast and serve it to mother in the kitchen, or perhaps in the dining room. The special thing is that you made it—and you can. Here are a few ideas for birthday breakfasts for mother:

Start off with a combination juice, orange and pineapple make a good mixture.

Cinnamon toast is delicious, as a change. While the toast is getting ready in the toaster, mix 1 teaspoon cinnamon with 4 teaspoons sugar. When the toast pops up, spread it with butter. Then sprinkle on the cinnamon-sugar mixture with a teaspoon.

Cinnamon toast has a wonderful smell and so does hot chocolate. Take 1 teaspoon cocoa, ½ teaspoon sugar (mother can add more, if she likes it sweeter) and one cup milk. Put the cocoa, sugar and a little milk in a saucepan. Mix well. Now put it on the stove, turn on the light, keeping it low. Add the rest of the cup of milk. Stir again. Let the mixture cook for about five minutes. Watch out that it does not boil over. Pour into a cup and, if you like, add a marshmallow. Serve it while hot. Do not fill the cup to the top or you will spill it.

Mother can then have ready-made stewed fruit or apple sauce, or you might find some muffins that you can serve with jelly or peanut butter. A jelly doughnut would also be a nice treat. Mothers like sweet things, too.

If mother likes dry cereal, you can dress it up by adding bananas or berries on top. Whatever you do, mother is sure to love it—because she loves you.

A Reward For Loving Animals

By LILLIACE M. MITCHELL

FATHER BEEM and Mother Beem both studied the dull grey sky. Neither of them looked towards Richard who spooned his oatmeal hungrily. Oatmeal was a luxury here in the snowbound mountains.

Father Beem had built the fire in the little shelter of their covered wagon. Twigs, a log well rotted with age, two rough stones rubbed vigorously until a spark ignited the twigs.... It had sounded easy back in the Middle West. High here in the Rocky Mountains with snow falling, falling, falling constantly and more promised in the leaden skies, the fire-building had not proved to be so easy.

The morning had been spent finding dry wood and getting the fire ready. Now the pale sun peered down at them through grey clouds and it was almost above them. Mid-day!

"We're getting almost like folks of leisure," Mother Beem said.

"I certainly do miss your help, son, finding dry wood. Does the leg feel any better?"

Richard's blue eyes were fixed on a spot a hundred yards distant. His spoon was held in mid-air while he looked. He seemed not to hear his father speak. A week before, while Richard had been walking along beside the covered wagon on their way across the Rockies to find a new home, falling rocks had broken his leg.

They had known the heavy snows were coming. But what they did not know was that this blizzard of 1958 would go down in history as the greatest blizzard of them all. It had been impossible to continue the journey with Richard's leg in splints. The axle of their covered wagon had recoiled to eat grease.

Passing through deep snows had made frequent grunting necessary. At last, Mother Beem had valiantly brought out her big bar of castile soap which had been the going-away gift of their neighbours back home. As soap, it would have been sufficient for nearly a year. As grease, it greased the axles just once.

"Son," Father Beem said softly. "Are you all right? Can you hear me?"

His father gave a short laugh with little merriment in it. "It was a dog's tail, son—something for you to ride, we could continue our journey. It might mean—" he stopped. His blue eyes, darker than Richard's, squinted in the dim light. "I do believe I saw a movement, too, son. Can you get over there with me? After all, it is your find!"

A REAL SURPRISE

LEANING on his father heavily, Richard stumbled across the little clearing. He took hold of the white tail and pulled gently.

"Dad! It's—it's a pony!" he gasped.

When they pulled him out, the pony was half-suffocated with the snow, his golden head and mane hanging down pitifully. He tried to twitch his white tail from side to side but he was tired and frightened and very cold. With Richard leading him along, the pony followed to the covered wagon where Richard put his bowl of oatmeal to the pony's mouth.

Mother Beem stifled a cry. "Oh, don't waste your oatmeal, son. No telling when we shall be able to cook more."

"He's hungrier than I am, Mother," Richard said, patting the pony and holding the bowl close to the quivering lips.

Father Beem growled. "This is the end," he moaned. "Indians!" They had heard all the way along, every place they saw and talked with people, that the Indians here in the Rockies were fierce. Now, riding up the narrow trail in single file came

The object covered with snow was a pony! Richard hobbled to the frightened animal and pulled him to his feet. Golly, boy, he'd like to keep this beautiful golden pony for his very own.

Indians riding along silently. Even the hooves made no sound on the snow. The Indians seemed not to see the single covered wagon but they rode directly towards it, hailing in a semi-circle within 20 feet. They looked and made no sound. It was more frightened than Indian yells. The little golden pony with the white tail sank to his knees but Richard sank with him, holding the bowl of hot oatmeal close to the mouth of the weakened and frightened pony.

"Chikel" called one Indian who was taller than the others.

RECLAIMED AGAIN

THE pony lifted his head. But he could not move. The Indian rode closer and sat on his pony, staring down at the kneeling boy who did not even glance up as the shadow darkened the pony. Richard murmured softly into the pony's ear and the pony ate.

"Yours?" asked the Indian. "I found him," Richard answered, one arm indicating the pony.

"As quickly as they had come, they rode away, the Indian on foot leading the little golden pony, now revived by a dish of oatmeal that had been meant for Richard.

Already, Richard was climbing to the pony's back and Mother Beem picked up the cook kettle. They could go on now.

Mr. Rat Plays A Trick

—O'Scowl Feels More Like A Goose Than The Goose—

By MAX TRELL

"IT'S hard enough having your own work to do," grumbled Pixie O'Scowl to Knarl and Handl, the Shadows with the Turned-About Names, "but when you have to do other people's work as well—!"

Pixie O'Scowl was too angry to finish his own sentence. He got up and stamped around the Old Oak where all the Pixies live.

Finally, Handl seized him by the ears and Knarl grabbed him by the arm, and they both made him sit down.

Tell Us The Story

"Now sit quietly and tell us the whole story," Handl said sternly.

"Lemme go! I'm too tired to tell any stories!" Pixie O'Scowl said.

"You're not too tired to stamp up and down," replied Knarl.

"Whose work did you have to do?" Handl asked.

"All right," said Pixie O'Scowl, grumpily. "I'll tell you. But I'm not going to enjoy it. And I don't care whether you believe it or not."

Hot Daisy Tea

Pixie O'Scowl said he had risen quite early in the morning. After he had dressed and brushed his teeth and had a cup of hot daisy tea and buttercup biscuits, he had taken his basket and gone out into the yard to gather mushrooms.

"I must have been working an hour or so when I heard somebody cackling behind my back. 'Chickens cackle,' said Handl. 'Was it a chicken?'"

"No, it wasn't a chicken," replied Pixie O'Scowl. "It was that next-door neighbour of ours, Mr. Rat."

"A real Rat?" asked Knarl. "Certainly it was a real Rat," said Pixie O'Scowl. "And there he was behind me, cackling away for all he was worth."

"Now what's the joke?" I asked, turning around and looking him straight in the eye.

"Take it easy, Pixie O'Scowl," Rat said to me. "Just wait till I tell you and you'll see how funny it is!"

"So Rat sat himself down on a public, made himself comfortable and said he had just played a terribly funny trick on a Goose."

"What funny trick?" I asked him.

"While Goose's back was turned, I stole her wiggling tail!"

"You stole her tail?" I cried. "What did you do with it, Rat?"

"I hid it," replied Rat. "Where did you hide it?" I asked.

"I'm not telling," said Rat.

"Wait till I tell you how funny it was," Rat told Pixie.

"Well," said Pixie O'Scowl to Knarl and Handl, "I dropped all my work and spent the rest of the day, up until this very minute, hunting all over with the Goose trying to find her tail."

"And at this very moment, Rat jumped up and ran away," because out of the corner of his eye he saw Goose coming up, sticking her head in every bush and hedge to try to find her stolen tail.

"And did you find the Goose's tail?" Handl asked.

"No," said Pixie O'Scowl. "I felt more like a Goose than a Goose."

"Poor Pixie O'Scowl," said Handl to her brother Knarl, as they both walked home later.

"It was planned on behind me," said Pixie O'Scowl. "I felt more like a Goose than a Goose."

THE BIRDS AND THE BEES

A SOFT BREEZE blew across the field and gently waved the blossoms of red clover. A mother bumblebee, resting from her pollen gathering, snuggled carefully over her nest of precious eggs. It wouldn't do to leave them uncovered too long for if they got chilled they would not hatch.

In the spring, shortly after she awakened from her long winter sleep, she had discovered an abandoned field mouse nest and had furnished it with wax cells in which to store honey and pollen and lay her eggs. She had manufactured the wax by a curious method. To be different, she built each tiny cell long and rounded, instead of hexagonal like the cells of the honeycomb.

She had made many trips to the red clover blossoms; had gathered nectar and pollen into the queer little baskets on her hind legs, and had stored it in the wax cells for the numerous broods of babies which she would raise during the spring and summer.

But the best laid plans of mice, and bees as well, sometimes go astray. A dreadful noise disturbed the quiet of the clover field.

A pair of horses and a mowing machine had turned the peaceful summer day into one of fright and anxiety.

Would her tiny home be mown down—her nest of eggs destroyed, and the baby grubs that had hatched out earlier killed? No. No! Not if she could help it! Nature had given her an improved weapon over that of the honeybee who sacrificed its life when it stings once. She had a stinger which she could use several times if necessary and still keep on living.

The older children of her family, children who had hatched and matured in the spring, heard the racket and came buzzing—each with a personal weapon ready for use.

The driver of the team paused to examine the situation, and then made a respectful circle around the nest. It wouldn't do to have the horses stung—nor himself. But most important of all it would not be good business to destroy the bumblebees. You see the red clover depends upon the bumblebee to cross-pollinate it. Only the bumblebee can reach the nectar in the red clover flower cups. Honeybees cannot reach it and so have to confine themselves to the white clover.

A few years ago Australia introduced red clover into their continent as a hay crop. The farmers there soon discovered, however, that they had to import bumblebees too for cross-pollination, or their red clover would not produce seeds.

THE MOTHER BUMBLEBEE is one of the few insects that broods her eggs and young. Bumblebees eggs hatch within five days. Some species of bumblebees feed both pollen and nectar to the baby larvae (worm-like grubs), while others feed only pollen.

The pollen feeding mother provides pollen pockets in the cells containing the larvae. The nectar feeding mother provides these pockets of pollen for her young workers only. The larvae of males and queens are fed nectar by regurgitation; the queen larvae receiving a special food called royal jelly. The mother mixes and liquifies the food in her stomach and mouth and pours it back into the cell.

At the end of seven days the larvae spin silken cocoons in which they pupate, or change from grubs into chrysalids and then into bees. The mother broods them for 12 or 14 days, finally helping each transformed silvery grey bee from its cocoon. It crawls to a honey pot for its first meal as an adult.

The queen mother then enlarges the abandoned cocoon and uses it to store more pollen and honey.

Young worker bees are soon ready to begin collecting nectar and pollen for the growing family, and before long the colony may number a hundred or more, depending upon the safety of the location of the nest.

Sometimes a strange queen will come and try to steal the colony. If the mother queen is killed, the new queen takes over. However, a strong mother queen may encounter several rivaling antagonists and kill them all—then continuing her work in peace.

Some parasite invaders are promptly stung. Others are treated to a "gunning-up" process by which they are smeared with honey until they are forced to make an undigested retreat.

Bumblebee workers have a life span of only a few weeks. Barring accidents, a queen bumblebee may live for several years, hibernating each winter.

According to early scientific calculations, a bumblebee should not fly. His fuselage (body) was said to have too much volume for his wing-spread. The bumblebee, however, didn't know a thing about aerodynamics, so he went on his way flying about the fields of red clover in blisful ignorance. If he ever reads it, he'll have to increase his wing-spread.

JACOBY on BRIDGE

THERE never was a rivalry at bridge like that between the late Hal Sims and the late Ely Culbertson. In today's hand "The Professor," as Hal called Ely, managed to defeat "The Maestro," as Ely called Hal, at one of Hal's favourite three-trump contracts.

Ely opened the seven of clubs and dummy's ten won the trick. Hal started after the diamond suit and Ely went into a huddle before making his first discard.

What's your problem, Professor?" asked Hal.

"I am trying to figure out a hand of yours that I can beat," replied Ely. "And I think I have."

Ely proceeded to discard the deuce of spades and six and three of hearts as Hal ran out the diamond suit. Hal's next play was a heart to dummy's ace and Ely's king fell. Now Hal threw Ely in with a club and Ely took his four club tricks. Ely's next play was the seven of spades and the three no-trump contract was doomed to defeat.

Ely had actually constructed Hal's whole hand and worked out the only defence to beat him. One club discard would have been fatal and at the end Ely had to lead his low spade, not the queen or the jack else Hal would have made three spade tricks.

A Dictator Was Her Puppet

EVA PERON rose from the slums to become the most powerful woman the twentieth century has seen.

But it was not until after her death that the world realised the full extent of her power; that she, not her husband, had been the true ruler of the Argentine.

Maria Eva Duarte de Peron, the illegitimate waif from the slums of Los Toldos, had created a dictator whose reign could not long survive her early death.

What set Eva Peron apart from other women? The answer is her burning lust for power and a ruthless determination to win it, no matter how. She chose Juan Peron as a means of getting to the top. If it had not been Peron, she would have found someone else.

Eva stands out from history's other women of destiny, for she used brains while appearing to use beauty. In fact, Eva was not a beautiful woman. Looked at objectively, she was not even particularly attractive.

An Illusion

But what Eva did have was a quite astounding ability to create the illusion of great beauty.

She used every means to enhance her pale-skinned, dark-eyed looks. In a country of dark-haired women she knew the dramatic effect of a blonde — and so dyed her hair. Her spending on clothes, jewels and cosmetics was fabulous.

When she left home at 16 to seek her fortune in Buenos Aires, her most treasured possession was an imitation pearl necklace.

When she died at 33 she left £2 million worth of jewels, 400 dresses, 600 hats, 200 pairs of shoes and a fabulous collection of fur coats.

Eva proved that for the woman on the way to the top, the most effective weapon is brains. With one vital provision. She must never cease being womanly. She must never be aggressively brainy.

Yet there was much about Eva that was truly womanly. For instance it is impossible to be completely accurate about her age because — with a typically feminine gesture — she used her power to have all the records of her life altered to suit her own tidier version.

It is known that she was one of the five illegitimate children of an Argentine labourer, that she was born about 1919, and that when she was 16 she was free of the squalor of Los Toldos.

BY Rex Lopez

So, using her radio programme, she set out to make Peron's name a household word. She mentioned his name nearly every day. She told her listeners that he was their champion in the government. She told them that he preferred the company of the descamisados (shirtless ones) to that of the frock-coated government officials.

Having come from the poor, Eva knew how to use them. They, the descamisados, were going to achieve her ambition for her.

When an earthquake destroyed the city of San Juan, killing 8,000 and injuring 50,000, Eva persuaded Peron to rush to the scene. She organised a fund for the people of San Juan. But it was Peron who handed out the money to the survivors.

First Time

This was the first time anyone had done such a thing. And Eva made sure the country knew it. Peron was the champion of the poor. Hadn't he proved it by his gallant and daring flight to the people of San Juan?

About this time Peron married Eva secretly. Meantime, his colleagues had begun to realise that Peron was becoming a danger to them. They arrested him and exiled him to an island near Buenos Aires. But they realised too late that they had acted against the wrong Peron.

For Eva, using her radio programme, brought out the mob. More than 60,000 descamisados crowded into the Plaza de Mayo, Buenos Aires' main square, demanding Peron's release.

Peron was set free, the martyr of the poor, saved by the love of his woman. And in March 1946, he was elected President by a landslide vote. This Eva became one of the most powerful women in history.

Eva in power was a fascinating woman to watch. She had little of what is called sex appeal. But she used her charm on the mob, and blinded their eyes to their own squalor and poverty. She was their "little mother."

She set up the Social Aid Foundation, a charitable organisation, which at the height of its success was netting £33 million a year.

Some of the money was spent on genuine welfare work, orphanages, hospitals, clinics and schools. But a large proportion disappeared as it into thin air, while Eva's "investments" at home and abroad increased. She used to spend more than £20,000 a year on clothes in Paris. Yet, when she visited the poverty-stricken descamisados, clad in an ermine-lined coat, they saw nothing strange in it.

Women's Vote

She was beyond questioning. One foreign visitor who did ask Eva how she disposed of the Foundation's vast revenue was told: "The money is for the poor. I'm too busy giving it away to stop to count it."

Eva knew, too, the strength of her handsome husband's appeal to women. So she got women their vote for the first time in 1951. And she persuaded them to elect Peron into a second term of office.

During the election campaign, she would stand on the balcony of the Palace facing the Plaza de Mayo, microphones in hand, blaring at the vast crowd about Peron's achievements.

Then for the benefit of women in her audience, she would plant a kiss on his lips. "That one is from all of you," she would say. But behind the scenes Eva was ruthless in her use of power. On her word men were thrown in jail, tortured, shot. She decided governmental appointments, issued orders and passed decrees. Peron's job was to sign them.

A government secretary who tried to alter one of her invitation lists was told by her: "One word from me and you're a corpse — you little scoundrel."

Throughout all this Eva never dropped her act of humility. She once said when she was at the height of her power: "I am nothing but a humble woman. A single sparrow among a immense number of sparrows."

He — Peron — is like an eagle who flies high and sure and the peacocks and near to God."

But when Eva the Sparrow was gone, Juan the Eagle crumpled and crashed.

When the end was near, Peron, knelt by her bedside, sobbing: "Don't leave me, Evita, don't leave me."

Doomed

It was the heartfelt cry of the eagle who must have known that without his guiding sparrow he was doomed.

Eva was dead. But she had accomplished all she set out to do. The only ironic twist in her ambitious career had come when her nomination for the vice-presidency was rejected on the grounds that she was too young.

When she had the records forged, she had herself made three years younger than she really was.

It was her one mistake.

London's old enemy

THE weather is one of the truly consistent headline-makers in Britain. Though I often wonder why the British should continue to be amazed by a climate calculated to make a cynic of any saint, their interest in their weather remains nothing short of morbid.

Recently it was the old enemy, fog, which pushed Khrushchev and cricket off the nation's front pages. It was the worst, gloated the headlines, since the Great Smog of 1952 which took nearly 4,000 lives.

It crept over the capital, turning this city of eight million odd souls into a place of the blind, crippling transport and shutting people up in their homes — when they were fortunate enough to reach them. Its cost in terms of health and money has yet to be counted.

Since fog is the foulest of the many climatic abominations suffered by this island race, I shall try to give you some idea of what a real "pen-souper" is like.

To start with it doesn't swirl dramatically, as the makers of horror films seem to believe. The real London variety lies terrifyingly inert upon its victim.

To the touch it is kelly wet, as if a steam bath had been rigged up in a refrigerating plant.

To get some idea of the taste of fog you should sit up all night in an ill-ventilated railway carriage which has stuck in a tunnel, and chain-smoke cheap cigarettes. At about 7 a.m. roll your tender and swollen tongue around your mouth. Note that furry, sulphurous bouquet? Now you're beginning to know what London fog tastes like.

But the most terrifying thing about fog is the blindness it can bring to a great city in only a few minutes. In a real "pen-souper" you can stretch your arm ahead of you and barely discern your fingers. That's what the British mean when they talk about being unable to see your hand in front of your face. And because fog plays tricks with sounds, you can lose all sense of direction. In such a fog you can become terrifyingly lost within a few yards of your home.

PETER BURGOYNE'S News From Britain

So next time you read of fog in Britain, remember the touch, the taste of it and the frightening blindness and spare a prayer for us benighted souls.

The Big Question

WILL Britain's next government be Socialist? If you follow the pollsters, with their graphs of political popularity, the possibility of a Socialist government, you will see, is nothing like as remote as it seemed a few short weeks ago. The latest survey shows the Socialists edging ahead of the Conservatives in the popularity stakes.

Personally, I still believe that the Conservatives will win the coming General Election which is almost certain to be held this year. For while I have no quarrel with the pollsters, I am convinced that the vital "font" of voters will, in the event, preserve the Conservatives in power.

Those "floating voters" in the main, not found among the groups likely to be affected by unemployment, which is the main obstacle to a Conservative victory. Therefore, I believe, they will choose the comparative prosperity offered by the Conservatives, rather than the controls and stifling egalitarianism of the Socialists.

The Conservative majority, however, may be whittled down by the intervention of the Liberals. The Liberal renaissance of a year ago seemed to have dimmed of late and the pundits have been saying that the spearheaded by certain Socialist M.P.s, is being made on the way television advertising is being handled.

The critics charge that the official watchdog of commercial television, the Independent Television Authority, is not being nearly watchful enough. The result, they say, is that advertising is being allowed to intrude into programmes in a way that would never have been agreed to when Parliament voted to permit commercial television.

Their principal complaint is that the programme-makers are not abiding by the rule of not advertising except during "natural breaks" in programmes. "Natural breaks," they complain, are being deliberately contrived.

The head men of the I.T.A. have now rounded on their attackers and told them they are interpreting too narrowly the function of the Authority.

All glasses is not yet spent on the subject. So watch for a large scale row over Britain's first venture into commercial broadcasting.

Self-Hypnosis

A PIECE of medical history was made in Britain recently when Mrs Pamela Brandson gave birth to an 8 lb boy. For Mrs Brandson became the first mother in Britain to give birth while in a self-induced hypnotic trance.

When it was all over, Mrs Brandson said: "I had a bad time with my three other children but this one, although the heaviest of all of them, was no trouble at all."

"I just put myself in a hypnotic state, told myself I would feel no pain, and that was that. I never felt any pain."

Three months ago Mrs Brandson accepted a free course in self-hypnosis from the president of the British Society of Hypno-Therapists.

Hexangular Rugby Continues Today

CLUB TACKLE ARMY SOUTH, ARMY NORTH HAVE EASY GAME AGAINST POLICE

By PAK LO

The Club ground offers the most interest for spectators this afternoon, for two games are scheduled to be played there, with both the Club teams taking the field. In what should be the best game of the afternoon Club at 4.15 p.m. meet Army South, while in the curtain raiser Club "B" are at home to the REME.

On the other side of the Club ground, the Army South will be the main attraction for Elliott will not be allowed to break through from the base of the scrum today with Campbell and Penman covering him. All in all then another win for the Club by a narrow margin, after a fine game.

Injured

The pack at time of going to press is unchanged, though there is some doubt as to whether Steven will be fit as he was injured on Wednesday while playing for Victoria. If this is the case Utley will probably be moved up from the "B" XV, and this is still a strong Club XV whatever happens with the accident still on the three and halves.

Army South are also strengthened by the return of Gilbertson at long last, and he moves into the centre of the three inside Sharp.

From this it can be presumed that Army South are going to concentrate on playing an open game, and as is the Club's obvious tactics too, this should be a really good game.

Better Pack

The Club forwards should on paper show the scrum, but should, with Miller and Newbigging, dominate the lineouts for Army South are without Mander today.

The Club also are the better looking pack in the loose and this should give them a steady supply of the ball, and there is no question of the Club three's ability to score.

Footballer Dies After Kick

Jack Ambler, 10, a promising forward employed on the ground staff of Portsmouth Football Club, died in hospital last week, three months after receiving a kick in a junior match. "We believe he had peritonitis," said the club secretary.

Army South without the ball will be mainly on the defensive for Elliott will not be allowed to break through from the base of the scrum today with Campbell and Penman covering him. All in all then another win for the Club by a narrow margin, after a fine game.

At Kai Tak the Navy are a little stronger both in the pack and the three, but the RAF brought Coombes back on to one wing with Martin and Carr inside him, while Hughes retains his place on the other wing. Lowe as a result is moved up to wing forward to strengthen the forward attack, and the RAF have a very strong back division on the field today.

If they lie a little deeper, they should have little trouble in overcoming the Navy for the RAF are much faster and more capable of penetration than the sailors. The latter, being the Navy, will not give in without a struggle and the airman though they should win should only do so by a narrow margin.

Riach Returns

In the other major game Riach returns to the Police three after a long injury enforced rest, and while they are now stronger, they have first to overcome Army North's forwards.

Kell is moved to prop where he should be much happier, and this should enable Cunningham to get the ball back more regularly from the scrums.

In the lineouts, however, it will be the usual two who will be getting the ball back to Phillips, and Army North are sure to keep the game closed up.

The Police have one chance of pulling off a surprise victory here, and that is by reverting to their old back and rush tactic that have upset better teams than Army North before today.

If the Police open the game up they are not likely to do much damage for O'Hare will have to move quicker if he is to get the ball away before Hill and Whitmore are on top of him.

Minor Match

This definitely looks like a win for the Army side, and though Leonard at full-back is a shaky starter this will make little difference to the result.

In the minor match REME containing too many unknowns to be assessed, but the fact that few of their players have been seen in action for a senior Army side points to another win for Club "B", who have a strong pack and a nice set of three line with capable of finding the gaps to rend his fast wingers through to score.

Today's Teams

Following are the teams for today's games:

Club: Steward, Browne, Addis, Lochrie, Inglis, Valentine, Tancock, Whitley, Williams, Howell, Miller, Newbigging, Campbell, Steven, Penman.

Army South: McDonald, Sharp, Gilbertson, Davies, Church, Bridwell, Elliott, Chapell, Richards, Lemage, Cleary, Tunbridge, Fitzgerald, Clarke, Williams.

Police: Dunn, Stevin, Scott, Riach, Bellingham, Johnston, O'Hare, Kell, Cunningham, Shelley, Newton, Counsell, Roberts, Bryen, Miller.

Army North: Leppard, Penney, Jowett, Webber, Bede-Cox, Phillips, Morris, Morrison, McIntosh, Wilson, Munz, Winn, Hill, Hodge, Whitmore.

RAF: Wilcox, Coombes, Martin, Carr, Hughes, Radcliffe, Poyner, Stear, Hill, Richards, Moss, Ahern, Lowe, Burwood, Conway.

Club "B": Martin, Laville, Hutt, Heenan, Cooke, Wiggott, Brown, Dillworth, Croucher, Turner, Barnes, Collinson, Sank, Utley, Spencer.

REME: Jackson, Clark, Swift, Nalsh, Wright, Pratt, Carthy, Jackson, Orchard, Smythe, Murphy, Dakin, Griffiths, Noble.

END THIS BOXING MENACE

By Harold Mayes

Headguards—I hate 'em. In fact, I think these monstrous pieces of gymnasium equipment are just about the worst thing ever introduced to boxing.

Many people are suggesting that the time has come for fighters to be given some form of protection around the eyes during an actual contest. But I believe that injuries around the eyes, which bring a premature ending to many a contest, could very largely be avoided by insisting that fighters do their gymnasium work without using headguards.

Headguards were first introduced as a form of protection for fighters. Now they've come to be a protection for promoters—against the risk of postponements caused by cut eyes received in training.

Primarily Responsible

And I'm convinced that that protection is being achieved at the expense of the fighters practising the arts and crafts of their business which would help to end the cut eye bogey without any need for trying other means to prevent it.

I feel that the headguard is primarily responsible for fighters falling to learn properly the rudiments of slipping and ducking which, after all, is the way to avoid being hit and the way to avoid being cut.

It's quite reasonable, in this day and age when the tendency is to try and achieve the maximum result with the minimum of effort, that men sparing day after day wearing a headguard find it easier to drop their heads slightly and take a punch on the hefty piece of rubber protection around their foreheads than to avoid it by other means.

And it's my contention that they do this so often in training that it's like night following day for them to do it in an actual contest.

After all, the idea of working in the gymnasium at all, apart from getting fit, is to ensure that a fighter learns to make all his moves automatically.

Not Only Complaint

So if a fault acquired through having protection in the gymnasium which is not available in actual combat is the cause of the trouble, why not eliminate the fault by taking away the piece of equipment which causes it to be made?

It isn't the only complaint I have to make against the headguard. The other reason why I believe it to be a handicap rather than a boon (the boon it is supposed to be) is that I feel that the perspiration which is trapped around the eye region by a headguard must obviously soften the skin and make it more vulnerable to cutting.

More 'Tin' Ears

The old-timers fought oftener than most men today, but they never had a fraction of the trouble which has become the modern fighter's greatest occupational hazard.

Summer Soccer To Replace Cricket?

Quote of the week: "Cricket is a dying game in Britain. In 20 years I see it's no longer played here. It will have been replaced by Soccer as our national summer game. I see matches played in the evenings, Saturdays, and mid-week." The speaker—golfer Dai Rees, British Ryder Cup captain. He wasn't joking.

Worst Golf Moments SLICED SHOTS COST MILLS £58 19s. 7d.

By JOHN INGHAM

IT happened at Estoril—and Ryder Cup golfer Peter Mills will never forget it. Playing in the Portuguese Open championship, Mills, in with a winning chance, started slicing.

DOWN IN EIGHT

In the third round he was three under fours when he walked on to the 14th tee. Then I knocked one into a tin millionaire's garden and out of bounds," recalled Mills.

"I played another ball and that went out of bounds as well. By then I was desperate and wondered if I was ever going to get away from the tee."

Including penalty shots, Mills had now played five off the tee; he held out in eight and finished the round in 73.

"That was my worst moment. A four would have given me a 69 and I should have won £65," said Mills. In fact, he collected £20 0s. 5d.

What Influence Does Luck Or Bad Luck Have On Sporting Affairs?

"Oh.... bad luck".... "Our luck was right out".... "The other side had all the luck that was going".... "We were out of luck"

How often have you heard one or all of these expressions used in the aftermath of an important sporting event?

Luck has been bandied about as an excuse for defeat ever since sporting competition began and there is not the slightest doubt that it has also been 'blamed' for unfortunate happenings in every other sphere of life since the beginning of time. The practice will certainly go unchanged into the endless future that lies ahead.... but, is it always a reliable alibi for one's failure to achieve success?

Luck.... whatever it is.... is frequently invoked as an element more in disappointment than in logical reasoning, and I am going to let you into the 'secret' treatment I received recently behind the closed gates of a famous British football club's ground. It would do sportsmen good to read the report thoroughly for it concerns one of the most enlightening affairs I have ever encountered in the length and breadth of sport.

The club was unexpectedly knocked out of the FA Cup and in the dressing room after the game the defeated players were bemoaning their luck. It is almost a tradition to turn to a defeated friend or opponent and reassure him with a "terrible misfortune" or "Bad luck, old man, better luck next time", and if that is what the vanquished soccerites expected from their manager they must have been pretty surprised when he quietly commented "Maybe it was luck, or lack of it, that caused our defeat today but we shall put it to the test on Monday".

Interesting Answer

At the time it seemed a cryptic enough remark. It probably gave rise to a great deal of speculation among the players during the week-end but they had a very quick and interesting answer when they reported to the ground on the following Monday morning.

When the players had assembled in the dressing room and had changed into training kit the manager called them together. The man who is the central figure in this story is one of the most respected club officials in the game. That respect is shared by his players and therefore they must have been all the more shaken by what he had to say.

From the privileged communication which I have received I quote, "In football one gets used to winning and losing but we should never stop examining our efforts to see if we did as well as we should or as well as we could. I've been in the game a long time. More and more am I coming to the conclusion that 'bad luck' such as you all felt you experienced on Saturday, is being used as an excuse for inefficiency in our chosen profession as footballers. Maybe it's because we tackle our job the wrong way; maybe it's because we accept error and mistake too easily; or maybe it's because we don't strive hard enough to reach the comparable standard of efficiency which is demanded of other professionals.

Less Efficient

"On Saturday I followed every move in the game and far from our being unlucky I came to the decision that we lost simply because we were less efficient than our opponents, or, if you want it put another way, we made more mistakes than they did."

"Some of you who still remember the shot that went just wide, or the one that hit the cross-bar, or the time you slipped as you went to shoot, probably feel that I'm being unrealistic.... and you will all have your chance to prove me wrong for we're going out onto the pitch to test my theory on luck and inefficiency."

The manager, the coaches, the trainers and the players went trooping out onto the playing field and—without any opponents—defended the goal—they went through a long series of forward movements and attacks all of which were supposed to end with the ball in the back of the unguarded net.

Hard Facts

Do you think it worked out that way? Not on your sweet soccer life. The players had to react to the various situations just as they would have done against opposition in the heat of an important game.

And, when a census was taken at the conclusion of the exercise, it was found that 27 out of 60 finishing efforts had NOT finished up in the goal!!!

Hard facts make stark realization easy and there must have been several shrunken confidences when the manager re-assembled the players to analyze what had taken place. Once again I quote from the report which I have received. "Well boys.... there is my argument about luck well demonstrated by your own efforts. As near as makes any odds 50% of all the chances you had out there were wasted. This time you can hardly blame your "lucky" opponents for you had none.... you can hardly say it was bad luck that.... in ideal playing circumstances.... made you miss every other scoring chance that came your way. The same argument in true of defensive mistakes and individual errors.... and all of them add up to the fact that as footballers we are simply inefficient.

By

I. M. MACTAVISH

"If a carpenter missed every second nail he tried to hit.... or an electrician fouled up every other joint.... or an air line pilot planned every other landing.... they would be considered pretty poor 'professionals' yet here are we trying to get away with the same ratio of mistakes by blaming it on luck.... or rather on bad luck."

Food For Thought

Now, you may or may not agree with the way this team manager tackled the problem of his defeated team.... but I'm certain you will agree that there is plenty of food for serious thought both in the originality of his methods and the findings which they produced.

Quite apart from the football aspects of the story there is a lot which sportsmen—and sports-women—might think about. Is luck really the vital influence in sporting affairs which convention would have us believe? Or can it be that it is the traditional alibi which sportsmen of one generation hand on to those who follow them? Is luck as real or as fickle as many folks like to think? Have you noticed how often its contra influence is invoked by those who are defeated but how seldom it is honoured in victory? Makes you think.... doesn't it....???

again preliminary reports have come to hand regarding the annual boxing show in aid of the Earl Haig Fund.

This event has long been established as one of the top attractions of the winter sports—and social—season. Somehow the worthiness of the cause has always brought the best out of the invited boxers and at the same time it has encouraged the fans to dig

It was a top class affair and the congratulations of the sporting community are due to the organizers. The South China Morning Post, to the officials of the Royal Hongkong Golf Club; to men of foresight like Kim Hall; and to the golfers who came this way to give the project such a wonderful inauguration.

The big question in many minds now is whether the event will become an annual one and whether we shall see it grow to become a great international tournament with a ready place in the engagement books of the golfing stars of the world.

Potential Is There

The potential is there and I know that the professionals who came for last week-end's competition were delighted with the treatment they received. They appreciated the hospitality that was extended to them, and finally they praised the conditions under which they were required to play.

The whole two days were highlighted by excellent achievements on the course and by a glittering social round off it.

One of the happiest men involved in the tournament was Bill Hitchens who, down through the years has contributed so much to Colony golf.

Quite apart from his participation in the competition Bill showed himself to be a most astute judge of what would be required to win the top prize.

When I wrote in these columns that Bill had given it as his opinion that 280 would be good enough for victory I was told by others that Bill was probably a stroke or round too high and that 276 might be nearer the mark.

The final results showed how accurate Bill's forecast was.... The winner's total was one above his original estimate.

13-15 Bouts

The 1959 Earl Haig Boxing Tournament will be held at the Macpherson Stadium, Kowloon on Friday 27th, February and once again the Hongkong Amateur Boxing Association is working tirelessly to make sure that this year's card is the best which current resources will permit.

According to the latest available information the programme will comprise thirteen to fifteen bouts and there is a possibility that we shall again see one of these popular 'Babyweight' contests between pint sized pugilists of the future.

The date for Earl Haig Friday.... is 27th February.... make a note of it in your diary. All charity minded sportsmen will want to be present.

CHANGES IN GOLF LAWS?

By DEREK JOHN

The announcement that the United States and Great Britain will get together in May to review the rules of golf forebushes a revised code from 1959 onwards. I believe there will be some major changes.

The Rules Committee of both countries spend a tremendous amount of time settling queries, and this shows the need for rewording and clarifying certain rules, and for trying to agree on a simpler solution for those which are most difficult to interpret.

In America, there is probably a large majority in favour of reducing the penalty for out of bounds to loss of distance only. In Britain, the question is not cleared that way, although on certain courses with internal out of bounds, permission to opt out might be given.

Although the flagstick rule has worked well, a player who has decided to have it unattended may, at present, change his mind after his ball is in motion, and vice-versa. But it was never the intention to allow him the best of two worlds.

92,000 DEATHS REPORTED IN 1958 Huge Accident Toll In America

New York, Feb. 6.
About 92,000 Americans died as a result of accidents in 1958, 37,000 of them in car crashes, according to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

The overall figure was about 3,000 fewer than the 95,000 who died in accidents in 1957. There were also 1,000 fewer deaths as a result of car accidents than in the previous year.

"It appears likely from data available that the death rate per 100 million passenger miles reached a new low level," the report added.

"Nevertheless, motor vehicle accidents in 1958, as in prior years, accounted for more than two-fifths of the total accident rate."

Homes

Accidents in and around the home caused about 27,000 deaths in 1958.

The company reports that catastrophes, defined as accidents in which five or more people are killed, caused nearly 1,600 deaths in the United States in 1958, or about 100 fewer than in 1957.

For the first time since 1949, there was no single disaster causing as many as 100 deaths. The nearest total was the 93 children and nuns killed in the Chicago school fire on December 1.

Aircraft

Four of the 1958 disasters involved aircraft.

On February 1, two military aircraft, collided over Los Angeles, killing 48 people. In April, an airliner and a military jet aircraft collided near Las Vegas, Nevada, killing 49 people. Later that same month, 47 people were killed in an airliner crash near Midland, Michigan, and in August, 25 people died when a passenger aircraft crashed at Nantucket Island.

The worst toll in a railway accident was 49 lives lost when a passenger train plunged into Newark Bay, New Jersey, on September 15.

The only natural disaster occurred early in June when a group of tornadoes struck northwest Wisconsin, claiming 30 lives.—China Mail Special.

NEW CAR PARKING ALARM

Franco-German Tank Project

Bonn, Feb. 6.
Herr Franz Josef Strauss, West German Defence Minister, said today a prototype of a Franco-German "European tank" would be ready in the first half of 1960.

He told a press conference the tank, being built jointly by German and French firms, would be lighter and faster than the American M48 tank now in service with the West German army.—Reuter.

Attorney James Fizzollo said the step was being taken to insure the support of Romanis, 7, and Karyn, 5, until they become 21 years old.

The girls were born during the late actor's marriage to Linda Christian, his second wife.

"It was agreed that in case of Power's death the estate would supply child support for the little girls until they become 21," Fizzollo said of an agreement reached between Power and Miss Christian at the time of their divorce.

"No exact amount was provided," he said. "The $200,000 is our estimate of what the daughters should be entitled to."

New Ideas

At present Mr Waldman is on a round-the-world exploratory trip looking into world-wide sales of TV films, and he is also looking for new ideas.

He said that almost everywhere there is television, the market is dominated by American films. "I feel that in the British Commonwealth there should be more British films."

The 44-year-old TV executive, who has been with the BBC for 21 years, said he felt that Hongkong would be a very successful centre for a series of TV

Senator Humphrey Replies To THE MAN WHO PROTESTS TOO MUCH'

Washington, Feb. 6.

Senator Hubert Humphrey today replied to Nikita Khrushchev's personal attack on him by telling the Senate: "Methinks Premier Khrushchev doth protest too much."

The Soviet leader has denied that he gave any secrets to the Democratic Senator during their eight-hour Moscow meeting last December.

The Senator said on his return from the Soviet Union that he had learned from the Soviet Prime Minister to President Eisenhower.

Hysteria

Khrushchev denounced Senator Humphrey's "fabrications" about differences between the Soviet Union and China.

Today Mr Humphrey took the Senate floor to declare: "This outburst of controlled hysteria from the Soviet leader indicates a high degree of insecurity in the relationships between Soviet Russia and the Chinese."

"I am surprised that he would go so much trouble and to such a high pitch of vituperation."

Adapting a familiar Shakespeare line, Mr Humphrey said: "Methinks Premier Khrushchev doth protest too much."

"He is obviously under tremendous pressure from within his own party and from the Chinese leaders to disavow statements he made respecting Soviet economic policy and relationships between the Soviet leaders and the Chinese leaders."

Objective

The Senator said his public statements about his long interview with Khrushchev had been "factual and objective" and his reports to the Government complete and detailed.

He said his only purpose was to lessen tensions and improve relations between the two nations.—Reuter.

Jimmy Edwards Films Going To America

by ANDREW SLOAN

This summer, the BBC will begin an experiment which they hope will mark the advent of British TV films in America.

Yesterday I learned from Mr Ronnie Waldman, Business Manager of the BBC's television programmes, that they will be sending a pilot film of a typical British comedy, for trial showing over American networks.

The film entitled, "Whoozie," stars the TV and radio comic, Jimmy Edwards, of "Take It From Here," fame. "It is a sheer delight," said Mr Waldman. "It should do well with the American audiences."

At present Mr Waldman is on a round-the-world exploratory trip looking into world-wide sales of TV films, and he is also looking for new ideas.

He said that almost everywhere there is television, the market is dominated by American films. "I feel that in the British Commonwealth there should be more British films."

shows, for sale on the world market. But he stressed this is only an idea.

His job with BBC-TV, makes him responsible for practically all the light entertainment side of production. Mr Waldman has been instrumental in getting such big American stars as Harry Belafonte and Jack Benny to appear on British TV programmes.

Mr Waldman who has been in show business all his life, began as an actor. "But," he said, "I turned to producing, because I could not mind my own business."

He joined the BBC in 1939, and after the war, he went back in 1948, he was transferred to the TV section of the BBC.

In 65 Days

Mr Waldman will be leaving Hongkong today for Sydney. So far he has been to New York, Ottawa, Hollywood, Honolulu, Tokyo, and after leaving Sydney he will visit Melbourne, Canberra, Singapore, Delhi, Bombay, Rome, and return to London.

He began the tour on January 7, and he should finish by March 12. "Around the world in 65 days. Not bad."

How It Began

For a short time, he was producer of the famous war-time show, "Itma," which starred the late Tommy Handley. "It was during the war," he said, "that a funny thing happened to me."
